There Are 5,000 Heartwarming Family Stories

A family to whom Merry Christmas was a trite label reserved for other families, knew the joy of a Christmas with all the trimmings last year, and it wasn't Ebenezer Scrooge that turned the trick.

Canada's Position Same

OTTAWA (CP) - Finance Minister Sharp said in a statement Saturday that the devaluation of the British pound would have no substantial effect on Canada's international financial position. "The government of Canada regards the present exchange parity of the Canadian dollar. that is $1 Canadian equals 92.5 cents U.S., as appropriate eserves in recent years. A drop and it intends to maintain that rate," he said.

All Eyes Turn To U.S.

From UPL AP

Prime Minister Wilson touched off a financial bomb Saturday in Britain but the eyes of the world are rivetted on the United States to see what effect the fiscal fallout will have on the richest of all

President Johnson quickly assured everybody that the U.S. does not intend to devalue the dollar. And so long as the U.S. is not forced to follow Britain in reducing the value of its currency the world should steer clear of the economic shouls that held it fast in the depression of the 30s.

But the immediate effect for Britain's much-criticized Labor government was sharp and bitter in many quarters.

"D-Day for Britain," rasped the Sunday Mirror, "only this time the 'D' is for disaster, disillusion and devaluation." Unemployment, tougher taxation and more stringent measures on the "never-never" or credit markets are certain. Previous governments have fallen for less.

The British government devalued the pound in order to make British goods more competitive. When a foreigner buys goods from Britain he must do so with U.K. money He could buy these pounds for $2.80 American or $3 Canadian until Saturday afternoon. Now it's more attracspectively. In other words, his money can now buy more British goods.

The worrisome question to the U.S. and other countries is how much will their own overseas sales suffer because British goods now are cheaper?

In the 1930s, devaluation of the pound helped touch off a series of competitive devaluations and exchange restrictions that throttled world trade and turned the stock who have been in the habit of baiting young people had better take a close look at foot power and the Miles for Millions campaign. The best thing is to get in touch with Bob Taylor, a third-year linguistics student at the University of Victoria, who has some strong views on the role of Canada in world effairs.

D

The foot power campaign involves getting sponsors for 26½ miles or part thereof. It just happens to be about the same distance as the famous Battle of Marathon caper. What makes this something more than just another fund the attitude of the young organizers.

Mr. Taylor took a swing at the centennial year program "This was a look backward and inward at Canada after 100 years of confederation," he said, "We should really be looking outward viewing our world responsibilities." The student viewpoint is that they are tired of trying to tell adults about what should be done and so "we decided to get involved and do something adults do something as well?" The idea is to get money to be spent on educational vans to tour Commonwealth and underdeveloped. Of the money collected, 80 per cent will be spent this way.

With a clarity of logic that often eludes adults, the kids decided that it would be impossible to teach children or adults who are hungry, so they decided to send the rest of the money of Oxfam to buy

Just to get the big walk off style, the local committee has invited centennial song sponsored man in the walk is University of Victoria president Dr. Malcolm Taylor. It seems just about every student has a penny or two riding on their chief. If he goes the distance, he could bring in a small fortune.

Each sponsor pledges an amount of money, from one cent a mile on up, and pays out according to how far his man walks. The walker can have any number of sponsors.

Good Housekeeping

THE ERA of high interest rates now upon us is something that Canada alone can do comparatively little about. Interest rates by and large are settled for the rest of the world by the banking coun-tries of which the United States is the clear leader.

It is quite impossible for Canada to have cheap money when its big neighbor is buying money at extravagant levels. If the interest rate on prime securities in the New York market is 6 per cent, then Canada, if it wants to compete for the investment capital must offer a little usually half of one per cent.

It is thus clear that no matter what the outcome of the government expense-paring program under dis-custions by the finance ministers of the provinces with Mr. Mitchell Sharp, interest rates in this country are not likely to change considerably unless there is a downtrend too in the U.S.
So long as the Vietnam war creates an inflationary tendency in that country, hopes of quick remedial action in the money market is not too bright. On the other hand, Canada by good housekeeping can at least strengthen the internal economy, and most important of all make a determined contribution to keeping prices stable and improving productive

The most heartening point from the scraps of in-formation leaking out from the provincial-federal conference is that the provinces appear more or less agreed with Mr. Sharp that government expenditures must be curtailed, or at least restrained.

The problem appears to be one of setting priorities. As Mr. Sharp has said the provincial finance mini-sters would not be doing their job if they did not fight for the best bargain available, but this does not mean they are non-cooperators.

The important voice of Ontario has spoken in favor of a delay in the medicare starting date, and its finance minister has put housing and education ahead of health in the provincial list of priorities.

Saskatchewan would rather delay medicare than lose its even more valuable equalization grant (paid for by the "have" provinces). British Columbia which gets no equalization but has a medicare plan of its own wants Ottawa to start paying a share of the cost on the promised date next summer

Yet Premier Bennett has acknowledged the need for combatting inflation and his government has endorsed a policy which will seek a voluntary restraint on higher prices and higher wages.

On top of this Mr. Sharp has told the country that temporary increase in taxation is in contemplation later this month, and the amount of extra revenue to be raised will depend upon the success or failure of the federal-provincial drive to effect economies. This is the important bludgeon in the hands of the federal finance minister as he battles his way among his provincial counterparts. The provinces relish the thought of higher taxes with no greater enthusiasm than do the politicians at Ottawa.

The important thing is that the rulers of this country have come to realize that living on borrowed

The War on Hunger

THE VIEW of the world food situation in President Johnson's annual report to Congress on United States food aid programs is not one of boundless optimism. He expressed confidence that with sufficient capital, technical skill and interim food shipments from advanced countries, the threat of mass hunger will

But even this conditional evaluation of the prospects seems glowingly cheerful by comparison with the forecast of a Stanford University biologist, Paul Erlich. Prof. Erlich says that the "time of famines" is upon the world; that it will be at its worst and most disastrous by 1975; that it is too late to avoid it; that although it may be theoretically possible to provide food for the six or seven billion people expected to be living in the year 2000 this is totally impossible in practice.

The professor has some fear that humanity might not see the year 2000 if families of the next 20 years bring about thermonuclear war, but with hope of survival suggests that man will have a second chance to end the overcrowding of the world. He proposes that the United States then should stabilize its own population (by compulsory family regulation if necessary); should educate the world in technologies of birth control and modern agriculture; should refuse to ship food to countries where a balance between food and population appears hopeless, or where populations are grow-

Somewhere between the extreme pessimism of the biologist and the guarded optimism of the president is probably, the truth—and hopefully, closer to the president's opinion. If so, more moderate versions of the same strategies Prof. Erlich recommends in the war on hunger may accomplish the same objects. And it is to be noted that more moderate versions of the same strategies already are being employed by the United States and other advanced nations. Perhaps all that will be needed is a stepping-up of the program.

Fish or Fowl

HOVERCRAFT, which ride on a cushion of air, have now been definitely excluded from classification as aircraft by the International Civil Aviation Organization. This means that these relatively new arrivals on the transportation scene are not subject to ICAO's international standards. But it doesn't settle the question of what the air-cushion vehicles actually

Since whatever they are they need regulation, however, it seems sensible to regard them as aircraft for national purposes at least. Mostly they will be used for transportation across water, and it may seem odd that, in the local instance, two firms have applied to the Air Transport Board for permission to provide hover-craft service between Victoria and the lower Mainland when the vehicles will in effect be fast ferries, operating down with the rest of the ships. But air-cushion craft also are capable of gliding over fairly flat land. They may prove useful in the northern muskeg, for example. For such use they could hardly be regulated

Slow aircraft, fast ships or motor vehicles without wheels, they sooner or later will need international regulation also, especially since their growth to transoceanic size is in prospect. Perhaps the ICAO will yet accept them, for though they never get very far off the ground, when in motion they are indisputably airborne. economy-eize nothing.

First Live Show Upbeat Success

English singer and dancer Toni Sinclair opened the first live entertainment program Thursday at the Old Forge and all indications are that she will be a big draw this week. The lively entertainer gives every ounce of her abundant energy and is clearly at her best in the upbeat material. Part of the credit for her

BUCK IS A BUCK'

The Carter Commission on Taxation, whatever happens to its recommendations, may have done something to immortalize itself, by claiming that a "buck is a buck" no matter how it is In the present tax system

there are all kinds of bucks . . bucks on which no taxes are paid; bucks on which a small amount of tax is paid, and buoks on which up to 90 cents may go The Association of Canadian Investment Companies, for one, will have nothing to do with the Carter concept. It takes strong exception to the Carter views that all dollars are the same. NOT THE SAME

"A dollar in the hands of an investor is not the same as a sumer or in the hands of government" says the association. 'We believe there is no inequality in treating capital gains differently from income gains. A dollar invested is a working, building dollar; a dollar spent on consumption is a rapidly circulating dollar representing value which is consumed or

"Too small a pool of invested capital dollars results in a poor country; too large a supply of dollars for consumption results in inflation and erosion in value of all dollars." "Any form of capital gains

Have they been struck by a bulldozer, pounded by a sledgehammer or blasted with dynamite? Instead, in every case, a human body was smashed against them.

The driver of at least one of those cars died in the wreckage. * * *

Dr. G. A. Asche of Hope last week suggested the steering columns and wheels of automobiles be collapsible and flexible. He is a member of the British Columbia Medical Association's traffic and safety committee, a group of which Dr. Peter Ransford, Victoria, is Fourteen-year-old Peter Rheinholdt, 295 Trunk Road, Duncan, is winner of the Colonist King Fisherman Contest Fish of the Year Award.

He won the highest fishing award of the contest with a 35-pound spring (chinook) salmon he caught in Becher Bay.

It was a little too windy to fish Beechey Head in a small boat so Peter, who was camping with his family at Becher Bay Marina, decided to jig for cod around the booming grounds inside the bay.

It was a lucky decision. The 35-pound spring salmon struck his bait and after a fierce battle he

"There is no way they can make it up, because most of them are on fixed incomes, said Mr. Armstrong, explaining that it would be impossible to estimate how many people living in Victoria received such pensions.

He doubted that many Victorians had large investments in Britain, "but certainly some will suffer." Mr. Armstrong speculated that most immigrants who had been here for several years had progressively been reducing their overseas interests.

Won't Help

"This isn't going to help the Wilson government," an Eng-lish couple in Victoria visiting hearing of the devaluation.

"The Conservative papers at home are going to shriek for Wilson's scapi," said Mrs.

Kathleen Ford of Shrewsbury, Shropshire, adding that she feared the deflated pound would send prices skyrocketing and bring greater hardships on the English people

She pointed out the United Kingdom's huge imports of raw materials and foodstuffs, and said that with the devaluation of the pound it would be impossible to keep prices down.

"They timed it nicely, I think the old-age pensions were scheduled to be raised this weekend from £6 10 shillings to £7' six shillings, married couples." said, "Now with a stroke of a pen they took it all away.'

She said she didn't think the average Englishman would give too much thought immediately to the dropping in the pound's value. They more than likely will shrug it off, and say that Wilson said he wouldn't, but now he has. So what? It's only another broken promise, said.

"But when it hits them in the pocketbook, the workers are going to put up a terrific howl for higher wages," she

Going Back Mr. and Mrs. Ford intend to end their Victoria visit late next summer. "I should have been much more dismayed on hearing devaluation of the pound if I were going to live here and depend on a pension coming from England, but when we get back home again, we'll be in the same straits as everybody else, so it won't be so bad," Mrs. Ford said. "But," she forecast, "This is the end of Mr. Wilson's government." H. J. Kennedy, Victoria manager of James Richardson and Sons, stock brokers, said the initial effect of the devaluation might be traumatic, but in the long run it would Howcum Nylons Run Faster Than Sammy?

By EILEEN LEAROYD

What's up with nylons these days? Howcum, I ask myself, can they make nylon parachutes that don't run, tear or shred, and a little thing like a nylon stock- anything quite as ennoying and humiliating ing thoesn't seem to last beyond a strong stare?

Mine run like mad. Daily, There was a book once called What Makes Sammy Run? I don't care about Sammy, I just want to know about nylons and why they run.

I buy them in supermarkets, grocery stores, drugstores, variety chops, little sub post offices, lingerie shops, airports and decartment stores.

department stores.

I can't see much difference between the supermarket variety (39 and 49 cents) and the 79 and 89 cents ones in the drug stores or even the $1.50 ones in department stores except in color and sheerness. And a $1.50 run is as bad as a 49 cent run. Worse.

A run's a run, but some do develop rather fascinating variations like holes, gashes and splits. Some just seem to disintegrate before your eyes.

a hole at the anke, that for various reasons I had to wear all day. I kept waiting for it to grow bigger, it never did. Just for fun I wore it the next day, the hole remained the same size, about one-half inch across. Apart from the one gap the rest of that nylon is as strong as steel. Strange.

I don't quite know why, but it seems to me that the narrow little run that sneaks up from the back of the heel is the most embarrassing. An honest 4-inch split over the knee is so obvious that everyone knows you did not leave home that way, but the nasty little heel run is open to suspicion.

For a woman, I do not think there is as being out with friends and finding a sneaky little run. It's foolish to hope no one will see it, they always do, and I think what a clean and crisp collar is to a man, a stocking is to a woman.

There is now a new gimmick in the hosiery business.

Some brands have a "if in 21 days, five of the six stockings in this box run, return the damaged stockings and we will give you three new pair" — guarantee.

What I want to know is, WHICH STOCKING IN THE BOX IS THE GOOD If one bought two boxes, and could find the good one in the SECOND box too, would

THAT pair last 21 days?

1 . * · * This game has all the potential of Russian

And its a game women have to play whether they like it or not. If the fairy godmother of the nylon hosiery manufacturers said I could have a wish, it would be, "please make all six last 21 days.

One fortunate thing for me, I have one department store, 2 Chinese grocery shops, one variety shop, one drug store and a sub post office that I pass on my way home. Not everyone is that lucky.

Head To Toe

MONTREAL (CP) - Montreal designer Vali says the trend in women's fashions is to the "total look," with women wearing a planned wardrobe from head to toe. Most acceptable silhouettes this season were the fit and flare, but her cruise and resort collection shown this week in-cluded modified tents, shifts, mini-skirted shirt dresses, patio pyjamas, jump suits and hostess gowns.

* * * The show was kicked off by a parade of swim-suited models.
They were hooded mini-coats orange cotton tricot over bikinis. In the same material for beach wear and a mini-dress

Among garish color clashes she had white shirt over-blouse with scattered flower designs to be worn with short purple pants.

* * * One slack suit showed the model's naked stomach and consisted of a short bolero top with hip hugging slacks whose top was outlined by a scallop design. There were a series of suits which had short straight skirts and slightly fitted jackets worn with ruffled long-sleeved blouses.

Cliffs for the man of the house...

The Man of the House, we always think, deserves an especially nice gift at Christmas... and most men are pleased as punch when they're given something good... and good-looking... to wear... And when this "wearable" bears the Wilson label... well, you've really done him proud! 1. As nice a sollection of dressing gowns as you could hope to see is now on display in the Men's Department... There are plain colored all-wool gowns... cosy Viyellas in plain and tartans... handsome jacquards in beautiful dark blues, browns, golds and reds... Striped gowns in a soft, silky material... Jugodi gowns... the Japanese-y gowns that all come in the one size... in cottons and terry cloth... plain, striped, patterned... So no matter what your man's tastes or complexion, you'll find the perfect garment for his leisure hours... If you get him a gown, we suggest slippers too... Wilson's have the famous Morlands real sheepakin slippers from England... woolly part inside, outside olive, tan or burgundy sueded leather... Wonderful for the man who wants to be comfy around the house... Soft-soled Packard slippers in dark brown, black and hickory... Wine or tan travel slippers in a zippered case... Warren K. Crewcut Best

By M. V. CHESNUT

OVERGROWN FORSYTHIA (A.J., Maple Bay) — Your idea of giving your Forsythia suspensa a horizontal haircut at a height of six feet above ground level is not a good one; it would not correct the congested growth, and in a year's time the plant would look more untidy than ever.

A better plan would be to cut it right back to within three inches of the ground, but spread the cutting over two years. Take out half the stems next spring just after the blossoms fade, and the other half the following spring; in this way, you won't lose too much blossom. Thin out and train the new shoots as they appear to avoid future overcrowding.

MOVING HOUSE (B.C.L., Victoria) - I don't quite understand from your letter whether you want a legal opinion or gardening advice regarding the moving of your shrubs when you move house at the end of this month.

From a gardening standpoint, there is no reason why you shouldn't take all your young and smallish shrubs with you; oldsters don't take very kindly to transplanting. Take them up with a good ball of soil around the roots, and if you can't get them planted properly spring; that is, take out a shallow trench, slant your shrubs into it, and mound soil up over the roots to keep them from drying up.

As I understand the legal position, if you are selling your home, what you take with you and what you leave behind should be specified in your agreement of sale. If you rent your home, any trees or shrubs you have planted have become the property of your landlord and you cannot take them

SCARBOROUGH LILY (D.S., Oak Bay) — Your houseplant is Vallota speciosa, the Scarborough Lily — actually a member of the Amaryllis family. The plant grows to about two feet tall, bearing clusters of orange-red funnel-shaped flowers in summer and fall. A good soil mixture is two parts loam soil, two parts peat moss and one part coarse sand or vermiculite.

The bulb is planted in a 4½ or five-inch pot with the tip of the bulb showing above the soil surface, and the plant does best in a fairly bright window of a coolish room. Water copiously in summer but sparingly in winter when the plant is in a semi-dormant condition. Propagation is by offset bulbs parent bulb; these may be detached in June during the annual repotting.

VENUS FLYTRAP (H.W., Boyal Oak) — These strange carniverous plants do best in peaty soil kept constantly moist through standing the pot in a saucer of water, and in an east or a north window. It imprisons its prey by closing its leaf lobes over it when sensitive hairs on the leaf surface are touched. The plant, when well grown, will produce a new trap about every 10 days. Each trap lives from eight to 10 weeks, after which it turns black and dies. The plant spreads and multiplies fairly rapidly, but only the mature traps will catch flies.

GROUND COVER FOR LILIES McG., Victoria) — You are correct in suggesting a ground cover for your bed of lilies; lilles always do better when their bulbs and roots are shaded from the sun, thereby keeping them cool and

ART BUCHWALD Among the Campus Draftees

Daffodils for the Sergeant

WASHINGTON - Gen. Hershey has decided to draft all students who are against the draft. While this is a noble idea, I think he's asking for more trouble than it's worth, We take you to Camp Loakum, the basic training camp nearest to Berkeley where a drill sergeant has been called in by his colonel to explain why his platoon doesn't seem to be showing too much military acumen.

"Sergeant, your platoon has the worst record of any platoon on this base. How do you explain it?"

"It's not my fault, Sir. It's Gen. Hershey's. He drafted all these anti-draft draftees and they're driving me up the "How?"

"Well, to give you an example, the other morning I came in the barracks and 20-mile hikey. They all started chanting, 'Hell no, we won't go, Hell no, we won't go.'

"I got mad and started to kick their butts in, so they all stretched out on the floor and announced they were holding a lie-in. Every time I called attention they went limp. I tell you, sir, it's driving me out of my mind." .
"Haven't you threatened them with punishment?"

"It doesn't do any good. When I threatened them, they accuse me of having a sadistic military mind, but they insist they love me."
"What?" the colonel splutters.

"Yes, Sir. They say they love me, and whenever I kick their butts in they give me a daffodil." Where the hell do they get daffodils?" the colonel shouts. "Their friends send them to they started handing out daffodils to another placoon.

of the base ever since." The colone? says, "I'll admit it sounds like you've got problems." * * *

"You don't know what problems are, sir. On the drill field when we're marching, instead of shouting 'left, right, left, right' they yell, 'Make love, not war, Make love, not war.' It just doesn't sound right from a military point of view, does it, sir?"

"I shouldn't think it does." "The other night I handed out canteen cards, and you know what they did? They burned them. I've been buying soap for them out of my own money ever since."

"That's good thinking, sergeant. What's that you're holding in your hand?" sergeant.

"Those are petitions, sir.
This one was drawn up by "The Committee to Legalize
VD, this one is the 'Ad hoc Committee to Get Our Boys out of Camp Loakum,' and this one I'd rather not say.' "What do you mean you'd rather not say? What is it?" "Well, air, this one is a petition to try you for war crimes." War crimes?" "Yes, sir. They've called for a mass meeting at 3 o'clock in front of camp headquarters and they're going to burn you in effigy."

"I think I'd better call Gen. Hershey and ask him to reconsider his last order," the colonel says. "That's a good idea, sir. I'd better get back to the platoon. When I left them they said they wouldn't make up their beds until Gen. Westmoreland apologized to Sen. Fulbright."

SHEILAH GRAHAM Meets a Non-Compromiser

This Star's Different

HOLLYWOOD (NANA) — I want to prepare you for a new kind of movie star — 29-year-old, tall, blond, British Nicol Williamson. New Yorkers and some Philadelphians have seen him on stage in the John Osborne play Inadmissable Evidence. He has now completed the film version — his first film — of this one-man tour de force. He will soon be filling the screens and if his movie debut is anything like what I saw on stage, he will be topic number one for the critics and the public. It's the story of a man having a nervous kdown. I can tell you that it's hard to sit in your seat

Some people may find Williamson hard to take because he is unlike anything one has encountered in a movie star. "Marriage is the only thing in the world I'm afraid of," he told me. "I like to be alone. I protect my world. Life must always be exciting. It has to move. I won't compromise. I've always lived in dirty little ratholes. Now for the first time I have a nice flat. But if I had to go back to the rathole,

The actor will not come to this country for the premiere of his picture. "If I saw it I'd run out of the theatre vomiting. It would disagree with me. I'll probably not read the reviews." (I'm not betting on that although he sounded sincere.) Don't get him wrong; he likes the film and the director, Anthony Page. "It was his first film, too. He has a big future. The film is very much opened out from the stage play. It was shot on many locations in London and at Brighton. * * *

"At the moment, I don't know what I'll do next. They want me to do a stage musical but I'm not going to do it. I'm a confirmed pessimist and no one can blackmail me into doing something I think is wrong. Everything's been said and done before, the only thing different is the way it's done. Samuel Beckett has gone just a little bit further on the way, but most of the plays are so dreary.
"David Merrick brings them to New York." (Merrick brought Inadmissible Evidence and they had an argument in Philadelphia — Williamson poured a can of beer over the producer who went for him.) "Merrick," continued Williamson, "says, 'I'm the man who brings you theatre,' Nonetheless, he's the only producer who does anything in the theatre. But it's all pretence. They don't give them any opportunity in New York. It's the foulest thing to be an actor in that city."

One thing is sure — Williamson will never work in Hollywood. "The fawning that goes on there. The dollar sign is the only important thing. It's one of those traps I've got no time for. Acting will always be my true mistress - that's the one corny line I'll allow myself. One doesn't have time for anything else. I went to college briefly. I found it useless and boring. I disbelieve in acting schools. I don't believe in the method. You have your own method. Rod Stelger is reasonably good. Marlon Brando wants to do all the parts.

His ego has crushed everything." Williamson never greets people with "Glad to meet you." he told me. "I just say 'Hello.' Otherwise you never get

Self-Education Goal

In Ontario Schools

Teaching children how to educate themselves is the objective of the Ontario school system, visiting superintendent John Given said here last week. ation of School Superintendents and Inspectors. By the spring of 1968, approximately 150 superintendents will have made twoweek studies of other areas.

He said that B.C.'s system modelled on Ontario's many similarities and some major differences.

In B.C., he noted, district superintendents are appointed by the department of education and are responsible to the department.
In Ontario, each district hire MAIN INTEREST

Ward county Judge Ernest King falled at a preliminary hearing to find any law to fit the case. He said the boy, whom police de-clined to identify, was four years too young to be handled under Texas juvenile laws.

The victim was seven-year-old Abel Acosta. His body was found Thursday night in a storage shed, shot once through the right jaw with a .22 calibre rifle.

Acording to police the six-year-old killed his friend in a bedroom at his home after they got into an argument. He said he dragged the body through the back door and hid it behind an old stove near the porch. There was a trail of blood, from the house to the hiding

Police thought at first young Acosta had been beaten to death because of the condition of his body after the dragging. The six-year-old was taken to police head-quarters Thursday night, where he slept on bench while detectives investigated further. When police woke him and questioned him, he confessed without emotion He said the two had argued and said

Mystified Labor Wonders Why Governments Talk, Don't Act

By MARY TAYLOR

PORT ALBERNI—The province has been lashed for doing nothing about public housing and the federal government has been criticized for not adopting Carter report taxation recommendations.

Expressing bitter disappointment at Finance Minister Co-ops and Credit Unions Decide— Mitchell Sharp's proposed tax increases, the Port Alberni and District Labor Council has drafted a letter stating its additional problems on workers already incapable of keeping up with rising costs such as housing, food and clothing, the letter to Sharp said. * * *

The council represents 6,000 workers in the Alberni Valley, which has the third highest standard of living in Canada. The letter challenged the efficiency of the proposed tax increases and urged implementation of the report so that everyone could be taxed according to their ability to

But the labor council saved its strongest punches for the housing crisis, which it contends is worse today in Port Alberni than at the beginning of the year, when the labor groups first started its housing Topping the list is the "complete inactivity of the Port Alberni city council." Second reason for the housing crisis is the lack of a provincial housing authority.

Provincial cabinet members have stated publicly that public housing is not the solution. The federal government will not act without provincial approval of the financial participation. * * *

Impaired Sight No Handicap

NORTH COWICHAN - Being blind in one eye and having only partial sight in the other has not affected Thomas Burge's quest for representing the area on council. He has announced his candidacy for the Dec. 9 civic elections.

An officer of the Canadian Scottish Regiment during the Second World War. Burge was severely wounded in action during the Allied advance into Germany.

Blinded, he underwent treatment in English hospitals and the famed St. Dunstan's clinic for blind soldiers before being invalided home. Despite his disability, he refused to accept this as a crippling handicap. He soon broke away from the usual occupations of the blind. He established his own television business on Salt Spring

Island and became an expert in electronics. His former commanding officer with the regiment, Desmond Crofton, who was wounded alongside Burge in Germany, is director of Harbor House Hotel on Salt Spring. In 1957, Burge moved to Duncan, where he lives on Mary Street with his wife and child-He is employed by B.C. Forest Products Ltd. at nearby Crofton. His wartime disability has not dimmed a keen interest in community affairs.

"This isn't going to help the Wilson government," an Engtheir daughter observed after hearing of the devaluation.

"The Conservative papers at home are going to shrick for Wilson's scalp," said Mrs.

Kathleen Ford of Shrewsbury, Shropshire, adding that she feared the deflated pound would send prices skyrocketing and bring greater hardships on the English people. She pointed out the United Kingdom's huge imports of raw materials and foodstuffs, and said that with the devaluation of the pound it would be impossible to keep prices

"They timed it nicely. I think the old-age pensions

But Pound Devaluation Won't Hurt B.C.

Imperial Pensioners Will Feel Pinch

She said she didn't think the average Englishman would give too much thought immediately to the dropping in the pound's value.

They more than likely will shrug it off, and say that Wilson said he wouldn't, but now he has. So what? It's only another broken promise," she

Going Back

Mr. and Mrs. Ford intend to end their Victoria visit late next summer.

"I should have been much more dismayed on hearing devaluation of the pound if I were going to live here and depend on a pension coming from England, but when we back home again, we'll get back home again, we'll be in the same straits as everybody else, so it won't be so bad," Mrs. Ford said.

Silver sands glimmer at Long Beach on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

A century ago at this time, in the autumn of 1867, the new Dominion of Canada, still having birth pangs, of course, was more or less settling down, and eyeing other British territories in North America, with the idea of having a Canadian confederation from Atlantic to Pacific.

In British Columbia, then a Crown Colony, more and more people were wanting to join the new Canada, though there was also a large number who wanted annexation to the United States. This group argued this would be the most sensible course, pointing out the entire Pacific Coast of North America should be under one flag.

The United States had just purchased Alaska, which horrified many in this colony. These people felt in the pincers of the United States, and said that unless British Columbia soon joined far-away Canada, Uncle Sam would gobble up this place and that would be that, forever and ever.

Certainly in the United States, there was a movement afoot to take over British Columbia, though it didn't get very far, and was never a really potent movement.

British Columbians were terrified of U.S. Secretary of State William Henry Seward, the man who negotiated the Alaska purchase. However, he played the diplomat, denying all suggestions that he had his eye on British Columbia, though there's little doubt he toyed with the idea, but there is practically no evidence to prove it.

evidence to prove it.

The New York Herald was always floating rumors that the British government was about to sell Fritish Columbia to the United States, or trade it, or otherwise make some sneaky deal.

There were stories a century ago at this time that British Columbia was about to go down the American drain. These stories became so hot that Mr. Seward himself denied them, but the British Government did not, which made The Colonist mighty suspicious that something was up.

This time The Colonist did not blame poor Mr. Seward: "We doubt if Mr. Seward had any

"We doubt if Mr. Seward had any hand in promulgating the rugnor. He is too sensible to manifest his anxiety to effect a purchase when he knows that that anxiety would cause an enhanced value to be placed on the property.

the property.

"As proof of how well Mr. Seward can keep a secret, observe the quiet manner in which the purchase of Russian American was effected.

"Was there a single person connected with the British Government or the Hudson's Bay Company — whose rights were distinctly effected by the cession — who dreamed that negotiations were going on?

"No! The news of the transfer foll like a thunderclap, and was as great a surprise to the Americans as it was to us here, within a few degrees of ceded territory."

New Dominion of Canada Called European Power On Canadian Soil

Loyal to Britain though The Colonist was, it felt the time had come to smack out at the beloved Mother Country: "The Imperial Government appears content to let it go forth to the world that it is so old and rickety as to wish to part with an important part of its colonial empire; that to appease the wrath of its American cousins it is willing to relinquish its hold on the Pacific Coast, and to show its colonies on the Atlantic how they may become an integral part of the American republic."

For shame, snorted The Colonist: "We complain that these ridiculous yet injurious stories are allowed to circulate without a word of denial from the Imperial government — in this colony, a re many credulous persons who believe every silly canard they hear.

"The reported sale of British about the abolition of reciprocity, fully believing that the people of Canada would rather be annexed to the United States than suffer the loss of international trade."

The United States was divided on the question of whether or not to annex British Columbia.

"The Lowell (Mass.) Courier thought it would be foolish: "It may not be amiss to ask whether it would be good policy to pay more money for land which we do not need, when we actually do need every dollar we can spare to satisfy the claims of our creditors."

"If it be true that Great Britain is willing to give us her possessions on the Pacific coast, it may not be amiss to close a bargain, but the idea of parting with any more gold, all of which we need, for land which we do not need, is one we should never entertain for a moment. We

Russian America will prove of great importance to the United States.

"We hope the period is not far distant when British Columbia and Vancouver Island, the missing link in the chain which should unite the American possessions on the Pacific Coast, will be joined, and that the glorious Stars and Stripes shall wave as the only emblem of sovereignty from the Gulf of California to the Frozen Ocean."

In Washington, some Congressmen were still talking about the new Dominion of Canada. They didn't like it, saying it was a European power on North American soil, and should be abolished, taken over by the U.S. before it was too late.

The Newburyport (Mass.) Herald took the opposite view, which caused some Americans to say it was a traitor, but which gave Canadians and British Columbians much comfort.

The Newburyport Herald said: "It is very singular indeed that we should carry on a war for years to maintain the union of these United States, that we should recommend union to the South American states, should approve the efforts of Italy and Germany for their union, and then should declare against the confederation of the British territories in North America.

"These provinces, extending from ocean to ocean, are inhabited by 3,000,000 people having as much in common origin, language, religion and national feeling as we have; they hold a territory as large as all Russia in Europe, and are capable of supporting in freedom and happiness 100,000,000 people; now why should they not unite for a common destiny? There is not a sane man in this country who does not know that it is the very thing they need for prosperity and freedom.

"There is not a person of common sense who would not be for that union if he lived in one of those provinces."
Why, then, should we object?

Some say it is a forced union. It is no more so than, the union of these United States, the union of Maly, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Russia, or Sweden and Norway.

"Some say it is the beginning of a monarchy in North America. It cannot be the beginning of a monarchy, unless the people desire it should be; and if they do what business is it to us?

Columbia is one of these; yet there are some in our midst who completely believe that to be true—

The Toronto Globe was not as kind to Mr. Seward as The Colonist.

Here is what The Globe said: "In the course of his tour, in the suite of President Johnson, Mr. Seward has several times assured the crowds who gathered to welcome him that if they only gave him a little time he would bring under the dominion of the starry flag, not only Walrussia, but the whole North American continent; that, in fact, before he died he would perch the American eagle on the North Pole.

('Walrussia' was a term of derision used for Alaska — a part of Russia covered by walruses and ice-

"Mr. Secretary Seward is famous for his unfulfilled predictions.

"Mr. Seward is, in short, a very sanguine and reckless politician fond of gratifying his countrymen by predictions which flatter their vanity at the moment, and is careless of his reputation as a man of judgement and forethought.

"The South was not subdued in the time that Mr. Seward predicted. "Nor will the North Pole ever belong to the American government and still less the intervening country between that delectable spot and the present northern border of the have land enough now to satisfy the requirements of our population for the next century.

"No prudent, thrifty farmer would think of buying land and borrowing money to pay for it, when he had already upon his hands more acres than he could profitably cultivate."

The Chicago Tribune got into the fray by running a letter which it said had been received from "an intelligent American citizen doing business in Victoria, B.C."

The Colonist duly reprinted the letter, under the heading: "Oh!—Who is he?" The Colonist evidently believed the letter was manufactured in The Chicago Tribune's office.

Here's the letter: "This British

In 1852, Hamilton Moffat, an officer of the Hudson's Bay Company employed at Fort Rupert, at the request of J. Despard Pemberton, Surveyor-General, V.I., to whom he subsequently submitted his report, made an east-west trek across the northern half of Vancouver Island. He was followed 10 years later, only in the opposite direction, by one made by Lieut. Phillip James Hankin, RN, of HMS Hecate.

By GEORGE NICHOLSON

Vancouver Island's West Coast 1762-1962

The Moffat trek started at the mouth of the Nimpkish River and ended at Friendly Cove, Nootka, the journey occupying five days. Hankin, who was accompanied by Surgeon-Lieut. Charles Bedingfield Wood, RN, also of HMS Hecate, made the head of Tahsish Inlet, an arm of Kyuquot Sound (not to be confused with Tahsis Inlet, Nootka Sound) his starting point, and after first having to turn back owing to trouble with his Indian guides, in two weeks time reached Fort Rupert, his intended destination

The purpose of both expeditions was to gather as much intermation as possible of the interior of the Island In the light of the tremendous industrial development, especially in lumber, which has since taken place throughout the Nimpkish River basin, the area drained by the Nimpkish River and its tributaries, and extending north to Cape Scott and across the Island to Quatsino, Kyuquot and Nootka Sounds, their journals make interesting reading.

Moffat noted the fine stands of timber, especially the red pines "large and long enough for spars for the largest man-of-war." and their accessibility to tidewater. Hankin also noted the size of the trees, but being a sailor was more impressed with the spars, "the most beautiful he had ever seen, averaging from 170 to 180 feet in length."

It is recalled that B.C.'s export lumber industry had its infancy in the export of ship's spars.

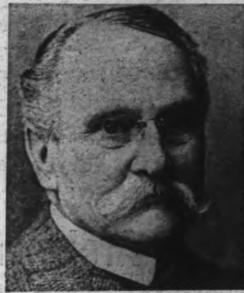

With the exception of the Fort Rupert trading post, with its handful of white employees, Indians then comprised the area's sole inhabitants, and their villages its only habitations. Today one finds not only many small communities, mostly in the vicinity of logging and mining camps, but thriving towns like Port McNeill, Port Alice and Port Hardy, complete with all the amenities enjoyed by those who live in the larger cities, and each with its own local government.

Moffat also saw the feasibility of a road running right through the middle of the Island and on down to Victoria. How true was the prediction! an accomplished fact when, in 1965 the Island's highway system was extended from Campbell River, via Gold River to Port Hardy. Vancouver Island Coach Lines now operates a regular bus service over his route, while feeder roads, open for restricted traffic, connect the smaller communities, logging and mining camps.

Interesting also are the observations made by both Moffat and Hankin in the customs and superstitions of our native Indians.

Journal of a tour across Vancouver Island to Nootka Sound via Nimkish River, in the year 1852, by Hamilton Moffat, Hudson's Bay Company's Service:

"Thursday, July 1st. — About 10 a.m. left Fort Rupert for the Nimkish village, en route to the Nootka tribe. Having arrived at the Nimkish River at 7 p.m. I procured guides and got everything in readiness for an early start in the morning.

"Friday, 2nd. — Left the village at daybreak in a canoe with six Indians; at 9 a.m. reached the Nimkish fishing village on the borders of T'slleth Lake (now known as Nimpkish Lake); entered the lake about 10 a.m. The shores on either side at this end rise perpendicular from the water's edge to a height of, some 1,500 or 1,600 feet, and from 4,000 to 5,000 feet a little inland, and in many places capped with snow.

"Width of lake at the entrance is about half a mile, gradually widening to one and a half miles. I endeavored to ascertain its depth, but did not succeed. Our course through the lake was about southeast, and the length I have since ascertained to be fully twenty-five miles (actually 16). In the evening we encamped at the River Oakssey, distance about a mile from the head. Discovered a tree resembling the wahut, having a trunk about four and a half feet in circumference, and emitting a fine perfume (probably the Balm of Gilead cottonwood).

"Saturday, 3rd. — After passing a most unpleasant night, on account of the rain which poured down in torrents the whole time and until 10 a.m. we again embarked in our frail craft for the ascent of the River Oakssey (continuation of the Nimpkish); stopped for a short time at the mouth to examine a large beaver dam, the finest I have seen yet. The whole of this day was spent working up the rapids, of which the river is one continuation; encamped in the evening at Waakash, the halfway house to the second lake, a distance of twelve miles. The banks of the river are rather low, and abounding in red pine and maple of all sizes. The country a short distance inland from the river is very high.

"Sunday, 4th. — Left encampment about 4 a.m. for another of the Nimkish fishing villages, at which we arrived at noon, where we landed to obtain a supply of fresh salmon, but were only able to procure three and a few trout, as it was rather early for fish to be up the river. The distance from Waakash to this place is about seven or eight miles, and the river, as yesterday, nothing but rapids.

"We remained only a short time here, and started for the Lake Kanus, distance about six miles. The Indians having told me that this part of the river was very shallow, and that the country through which we had to pass to the lake was pretty open. I started on foot with a portion of my crew and arrived at the lake after a very pleasant walk. The country through which I passed was clear with occasional belts of wood and brush, and abounding in partridges (probably grouse), of which I shot a good many.

"During my walk I was informed of a tribe of Indians living inland, having no cames or connection with the seacoast whatever, I have since learned that these people sometimes descend some of the rivers for the purpose of trade with the Nootka Indians, and they offered to guide me to the place at any time should I wish. The name of the tribe is Saa Kallituck; they number about fifty or sixty men, and were only discovered a few years back by one of the Nimkish chiefs while on a trapping expedition.

"Our party while sitting around the fire on the banks of a small rivulet, observed a beaver playing in the water water.

the banks of a small rivulet, observed a beaver playing in the water, and having followed the course of the stream in hopes of falling in with a dam, came suddenly upon a lake, and the first thing that struck our attention was a small village situated at the opposite side. Upon entering the camp we were well received by the Indians and opened up a trade for skins, of which they had an abundance, and which they used for clothing.

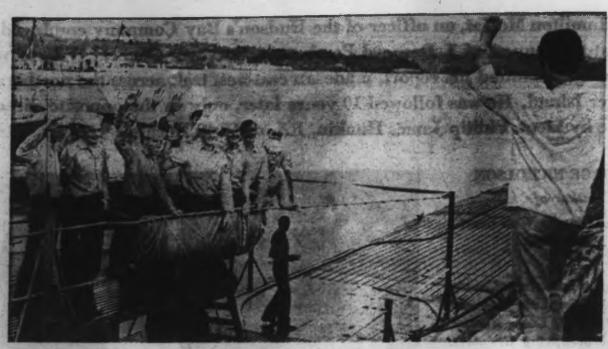

"They informed us that the southern Indians (as we supposed the Sanetch) had been there on war parties and killed a good number of them. This tribe is known to the Nootkas, who have a superstitious idea that they are the spirits of their dead, on account of their speaking the same language

"From the time the Nimkish say it takes to perform the journey, and from the Sanetch, or more probably the Comox, having knowledge of these people, I have not the least doubt that a good road might, with little difficulty, be discovered from here to Victoria through the very centre of the Island.

"After passing through this lake, which is probably about ten miles long, we encamped at the base of a snow-capped mountain. Two very

A recent visitor to Victoria has recalled one of the most daring and historic naval battles of the Second World War.

August saw the American submarine USS Archerfish at HMC Dockyard to refuel and allow her crew several days' liberty. A sister craft of HMCS Grilse, formerly USS Burrfish, Archerfish boasts three unique distinctions:

Firstly, she is the only hydrographic survey vessel in the U.S. Navy. Secondly, because she logs up to 5,000 miles in a single month, every crewman is a bachelor. Last, but certainly not least, it was USS Archerfish which sank the largest warship in naval history.

Commissioned Sept. 4, 1943, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Archerfish began her first war patrol four months later, out of Pearl Harbor. Exactly a year to the day of the laying of her leel, Lt.-Cmdr. G. W. Kohl successfully stalked a 9,000-ton freighter off Formosa, scoring the submarine's first strike.

Her second patrol, 42 days off Palau Island was uneventful. But Archerfish's third sweep of enemy seas, now under Lt.-Cmdr. W. H. Wright, resulted in the impressive total of one 800-ton coastal defence craft sunk, a 10,000-ton transport and a second, unidentified, vessel damaged, despite heavy resistance.

Two days later, Archerfish rescued a downed USAF fighter pilot. That afternoon, while searching for other downed pilots, an enemy plane dived to the attack, strafing the surfaced raider without achieving injury. Further recovery operations saw rescue of the lone Japanese survivor of a sunken patrol boat.

The fourth sweep, 53 days in the danger-filled waters off Japan, netted only un damage to a patrol craft by deck gun. only undetermined

It was Archerfish's fifth venture into enemy seas which brought her immortality — and perhaps shortened the Second World War!

USS Archerfish Shortened Second World War

by sinking 'Invincible' Japanese aircraft carrier

Darkness had fallen early, that wintry evening of November 27, 1944, and Capt. Toshio Abe smiled confidently to himself on the towering bridge of his 59,000-ton super aircraft carrier, Shinano. Only a water-color moon blinked somberly from an overcast sky, shielding the world's greatest warship and her four-destroyer escort as they sped at 20 knots for Matsuyama.

Soon they would reach the Combined Fleet Training Area for final manoeuvres. Then, beamed Abe, Shinano would write the bloodiest shapter of the three-year conflict. Nothing could stop her.

Mighty Shinano was one of the best-kept secrets of the war. From the laying of her keel, four years before, to her maiden cruise, U.S. intelligence had not so much as an inkling of her existence. Originally intended as a battleship, the growing monster had been altered to super flattop in 1942, when the Imperial Admiralty alarmed at the sinkings of British and German battlewagons.

Built in the famous Yokosuka naval yard, Shinano was protected from prying eyes by enormous bamboo walls and specially-designed camouflage roofing. Only the finest craftsmen of unquestioned loyalty worked on the project.

Japanese intelligence worked painstakingly to mislead American naval authorities in the opening months of 1941. The wily Oriental ruse succeeded admirably. When Pearl Harbor came, the USN knew all about the building "I-402:" She was a submarine with deck hangar for three aircraft — to bomb the Panama Canal!

Now Shinano steamed through the dark night of Nov. 27, 1914, to keep her appointment with Perhaps it was as well for the Americans that they did not expect Shinano, Capt. Abe joked with omcer, Cmdr. Aratma. He was thinking of his ships' five-foot-thick flight deck of specially-treated concrete and steel. With proper ort, Shinano could launch her 70 bombers against any target with virtual impunity. Even should an enemy aircraft penetrate her ring of exploding shrapnel, guided by the finest gunnery control available, no bomb then in existence could damage her decks.

This was the leviathan swiftly bearing down an a lone American submarine - USS Archerfish. The first B-29 raids against Japan were patrol 29 days when her new CO. Cmdr. J. F. Enright, spotted the oncoming armada through his periscope, in the last pale light of Nov. 28. Visibility was poor and Enright concluded the target was an escort carrier, smallest of the Japanese line, screened by four destroyers. Due to the enemy's high speed. Enright had no choice but to make his run on the surface.

General quarters sounded on the giant carrier as the sharp lookout reported a suspicious shadow due east. Capt. Abe ordered a zig-zag course at full speed as one of his destroyers wheeled to investigate, its rapier bow descending on Archerfish in a slash of phosphorescent white Siren wailing, Cmdr. Enright shouted: 'Dive! Dive!" The steel cigar bit into the waves, ballast tanks filling ever so slowly, then vanished in a swirling stream. Rigged for silent running, Enright kept Archerfish at periscope depth, not taking his eyes from the speeding carrier.

The Jap came on, beginning its swee
Minutes dragged by, the destroyer chasing he and forth like a dog after scent. Finally the warship returned to its former position, the convoy ended its zig-zag. Apparently the Japanese were satisfied it had been a false alarm.

Ironically, when Capt. Abe resumed course, he was bringing his ship right across Archerfilm's line of fire. There would be no second chance, and Cmdr. Enright barked, "Fire One! Fire Two!"

The slivers of death leaped from Archerfish's forward tubes, streaking toward Shinano in foaming ivory trails. One, two, three . . . six torpedoes raced through the oily sea

Even as a succession of dull explosions rocked the night, Archerfish was gliding to the bottom to await the depth-charges she knew to be coming. The destroyers zeroed in to the attack, ino continuing course at 20 knots Three terror-filled hours later, during which was over, Archerfish could continue her patrol. Sadly, Enright noted the action in his log, claiming one escort carrier slightly damaged. The exciting patrol ended at Guam, fish's weary men enjoying a much-deserved Christmas rest. Then it was back to war, her sixth sweep resulting in yet another enemy cease-fire finally came. Aug. 31, 1945, Archerfish and 11 sister subs steamed into Tokyo Bay, berthing near Yokosuka navy yard. After the historic surrender aboard USS Missouri, Archerfish returned to Pearl Harbor.

Two years of war, during which she had steamed 75,000 miles, most of them in the enemy's backyard, were ended.

And mighty Shinano? Not until after V-J Day did the U.S. Navy learn of the monster flattop. Even more time passed before the officers and men of Archerfish were told of the incredible foe they had stalked, that cold winter morning of Nov. 29, 1944.

The carrier's watch had instantly spotted the torpedoes wakes. But even as they radioed the alarm, it was too late. Ruthlessly, the six missiles buried themselves deep into Shinano's belly, shattering her "invincible" hull.

Capt. Abe was not even distressed by the grim reports of damage control parties. Told the pumps could not handle the growing flood, he replied, "Nothing can sink Shinano. Continue course and speed."

And Shinano sped on, leaving the destroyers to handle Archerfish.

But the finest equipment in the world could not heal the injuries inflicted by six torpedoes. Six hours later, even Capt. Abe knew the end was near. Shinano's flight deck, a desert of steel that extended almost as far as the eye could see, was heeling sharply. When Abe finally ordered abandon ship, the seas became a thrashing maelstrom of terrified, dying man. The destroyers could not reach most of them. Minutes later, more than 500 vanished in the carrier's immense vacuum. Capt. Abe, standing erect on the abandoned bridge, rode his ship down.

On her maiden voyage, without having fired a shot, without having launched a single plane, the greatest warship in history was gone. Leaving armchair tacticians to wonder for all time what havoc Shinano might have wreaked before the mushroom clouds over Japanese cities.

Archerfish and crew later received one of the nation's highest honors, the Presidential Unit Citation, which reads:

"For extraordinary heroism in action during the Fifth War Patrol against Japanese combatant units in restricted waters of the Pacific. Relentless in tracking an alert and powerful hostile force which constituted a potential threat to our vital operations in the Philippine area, the USS Archerfish culminated a dogged six and onehalf-hour pursuit by closing her high-speed target. daringly penetrated the strong destroyer escort, and struck fiercely at a large Japanese aircraft carrier with all six of her torpedoes finding their mark to sink this extremely vital enemy ship.

"Subjected to devastating air and surface antisubmarine measures, the Archerfish skilfully evaded her attackers by deep submergence and returned to port in safety. Handled with superb seamanship, she responded gallantly to the fighting determination of her officers and men and dealt a fatal blow to one of the . . . fleet units despite the most merciless Japanese opposition rendered a valiant service toward the ultimate destruction of a crafty and fanatice enemy."

fine falls cascade several hundred feet from its summit and the stream which they form abound in trout of excellent quality and great size, numbers of which we caught.

"Monday, 5th. — Early this morning I started, accompanied by an Indian, for the summit of the mountain, which I named Ben but did not succeed in reaching any farther than the second tier of snow, on account of the ascent being so steep, so having been disappointed in my walk, I returned to the camp at 9 a.m. and set out for the walk across the portage, a succession of mountain defiles, to the headwaters of the Nootka River (the Tahsis). This river, during the course of three or four miles from its source, disappears three different times. Stopped about noon to dine, and after half rest recommenced our journey, and arrived in Nootka Sound at 7 p.m. after passing over 16 or 18 miles.

"I have not, however, reached my destination or the night yet, the Indian wishing to encamp further down the sound, on account of some superstitious fear of ghosts. Stopped for a short ne at a fishing village, where I saw the wheel of a ship. The Indian houses here are very large, in fact more so than those of the Indians near

"Tuesday, 6th. - Having passed a very comfortable night under cover of a large quantity of salmon frames, we started early for the Nootka village of Friendly Cove, passing through a long inlet (Tahsis) that runs about southeast and is surrounded by lefty mountains covered to very top with timber. Arrived at destination at 4 p.m., having occupied five days on our journey from the Nimkish village.

"Upon entering Friendly Cove we were received by a discharge of cannon from the chief's house. Until we were about to land searcely an Indian was to be seen, but at a given signal the whole tribe darted from their h and commenced a grand dance in honour of the arrival of a white man to visit them, after which a sea otter robe was presented to me by the shief, and we landed amid the welcome shouts of the Nootkus. In the evening a grand fancy dress ball was given and a large quantity of blankets and other property distributed (a potlatch).

"Wednesday, 7th. — Nothing strange or new; time mostly spent in feasting and smoking in the houses of the different chiefs, all of whom seemed to be on the highest terms of friendship.

"Remarks: The timber in the interior of the faland is very fine, in fact the banks on both sides of the Nimkish River, from the first lake almost to the Nootka Inlet, are lined with splendid red pines, large and long enough for the spars of the largest man-of-war. The water communication is also of great consideration; spars could be squared, rolled into the water and floated down without difficulty to any depot such as the anchorage at Biece or even Beaver Covs. Other timber is also abundant.

"Berries grown in abundance, especially a small dark berry resembling heavy shot. I am unacquainted with the name, it is plentiful down south and at Comox. Salmon of various kinds and of splendid quality are found in abundance on the coast, as well as halibut and other sea fish. Rock oysters of large size I procured at Nootka, but coept for mussels and barnacles, saw few other shellfish. Crabs were plentiful, also starfish, sea cucumbers and sea anemones. The soology is the same as other parts of Vancouver Island."

With the exception of Nimkish, which is now spelled "Nimpkish," rivers and lakes referred to in Moffat's report have been given new names in recent surveys. Current maps show the route of his trek as follows: up the Nimpkish Lake and river to Woss Lake, then over the divide to the head of Tahsis Inlet on Nootka Sound.

In mileage, the route taken by Hankin was far shorter than that of Moffat's, which, with the exception of the portage over the divide, consisted of navigable (for cances) rivers and lakes nearly the whole distance. This advantage was denied Hankin, for even under normal conditions the Tahsish River would be navigable for scarcely six miles and as it was he found it in full flood, owing to incessant rains during the past forty-eight

Notwithstanding, the Indians managed to egotiate the river for about three miles 'til at last the canoe had to be abandoned and the party proceed on foot. In consequence, gear supplies now had to be back-packed, with a considerable quantity left behind. And to further lighten their burden, Dr. Wood was reluctantly obliged to leave behind his collecting gear. (Dr. was also a botanist; his part expedition being to collect specimens of plant

Still the flood-swollen river, with its treacherous rapids, high waterfalls and deep canyons, with devil-club thickets lining both banks, continued to present its physical difficulties. Waist and often breast-deep crossings were accomplished by all holding to a long pole, all hands thereby supporting one another.

The going was slow even after leaving the river, for a log raft, of sufficient size and buoyancy to carry eight men and their dumnage across to the other side of each lake encountered. had to be constructed. Trees were felled and lashed together with strips of oedar bark, but with only one axe — a second one was lost — the task held up progress more than anything else.

A stream connecting Huston and Anutz Lakes, Hankin named Famine River, for now a meal consisted of tea and damper, with the Indians reduced to eating roots and ferns.

Soon the upper end of Karmutzen (Nimpkish) Lake was reached, but with the journey by no means ended and the rations completely exhausted. Here they hoped to find some Indians and obtain a cance, but these people had finished smoking their salmon and returned to their villages on the coast. Instead, a large cedar log found on the beach improvised for a raft, and on board they packed their traps and themselves. They paddled out a short distance when it commenced to roll and threatened to capsize them into the lake. Returning to the beach, with ropes fashioned from cedar back, they lashed spars to form an outrigger, and aboard this strange craft, with a blanket (the only one they now had, others long since ditched to lighten their packs) and by paddling, they managed to negotiate the full length of the lake. Indians were met, a canoe hired, and that evening, two weeks after starting out, Hankin and Wood arrived safely at Fort Rupert, to be met and suitably entertained by none other than Hamilton Moffat, Two days later the Hecate arrived.

Surprisingly, with the exception of Nimpkish Lake, which is referred to by Hankin as "Karmutzen" Lake, its other Indian name and still the name of a tributary of the Kilpala River, which empties into Nimplish Lake on its west side, the lakes encountered by Hankin to this day bear the same names, only in some instances spelled a little different.

Thus his route can easily be traced on today's maps: From tidewater at the head of the Tabsish River on Kyuquot Sound, up the Tahsish River three miles, then overland in turn via the following lakes: Atluck, Huston, Anutz and finally Nimpkish.

Hankin comments on the Kyuquot Indians, made during his stay at their village while engaging his guides, each one of whom was to receive five blankets and a shirt for his services:
"We found the natives here most civil and obliging, and although they had both temptation and opportunity, it is worthy to remark that not the smallest trifle was stolen from us. On one occasion I lost a meerschaum pipe, which was afterwards found and returned to me

With the exception of occasional visits from trading schooners, they had seen but little of whites. But two of them had visited Victoria and had returned with such wonderful accounts that others were eager to go. And their desire to see the Hecate was intense.

"Some of the younger women wore calico dresses, and few of the younger men, trousers, But the older men and women were clothed principally in a blanket and cape made from the bark of the cyprus (cedar).

"A lew wool blankets seen were the prize possessions of the chief's family From the cyprus tree they also manufactured cances and paddles, and from its bark and fibre, hats which shed the rain (the Nootka hat), matting, baskets, fishing nets, twine and stout ropes used for whale fishing.

One of their favourite games was a trial of strength. Fifty or 60 men, with naked bodies and their faces daubed with red and black paint, would seize a long pole using to as a battering ram, and with tremendous yells, looking more like demons than human beings, charge against 150 others, who, with their united strength would endeavour to route the invaders

"A quieter game was to stick a feather in the ground, when an Indian standing on one foot would stoop down and without touching ground with his hand, extract the feather with his This feat I tried several times and generally tumbled, my embarrassment causing a hearty laugh all round. I showed them some of our games, leaping, jumping, racing, etc., in which they appeared to be both interested and

VICTORIA to the BAHAMAS By LIGHT PLANE By ROY PARRETT

Second of three parts

SYNOPSIS: Roy and Mande Parrett took off in their Piper Clipper June 22 to fly to the Bahamas. They "squeaked" through Snoqualmie and Stampede passes in the rain, got lest over the Columbia, flew a friendly radio beam into Pendleton and "dead-reckoned" their way non-stop over Utah's badlands and south to Albuquerque. They followed the Rio Grande toward the Mexican border only to run into heavy rain out of El Paso. Fifteen miles out of the city, El Paso Radio advised them to get down on the ground at once. We join them as they looked for a place to land.

Maude consulted the chart and announced that the nearest field was Roberts Airstrip, a few miles to the north. It was marked on the map, but not listed among the New Mexico facilities. El Paso radio called again:

"What is your position Golf November Oscar?"

"Over Anthony maintaining 1,200 feet."

"Can you climb above 1,200?"

"Negative - we are turning north for Roberts Airstrip."

"I do not know Roberts."

That was comforting news, we didn't spot it on the way down, and it was nowhere in sight where the map said it should be and the sky was getting blacker by the minute.

"GNO . . . keep us posted, we'll stay with you. That assurance from El Paso sounded ominous as conditions here weren't that bad, although, toward the city, the sky was really "El Paso ... Roberts is nowhere to be seen, shall we come on in to El Paso?"

"Negative GNO ... what's the ceiling where you are?

"Maintaining 1,200, but not for long . . . suggest we follow the railroad in.

"Okay GNO ... watch for three chimneys off your right wing — they are nearly 2,000 feet high."

II.16 quipped - the tops of the smokestacks were above the ceiling! But we were glad of the warning. Soon we spotted them ahead in the murk, painted with alternate bands of color.

"El Paso, we have the stacks in sight. "Okay . . . look for a racetrack to the right of them ... advise when you have it."
"We have it in sight, El Paso."

"Sunland Airpark is near the track, can you make it out?'

THE PARRETTS ENCOUNTER TORRENTIAL RAINS

BACK SEAT of the Parrett's Piper was camping gear.

Suddenly a hanger with a big welcome sign on the roof came in sight through the mist and rain and, nearby, a paved runway.

'We're in the pattern El Paso, close us out at Sunland and many thanks." We were still puzzled by the operator's obvious concern. The weather was not actually below limits and we had flown through worse.

The answer was soon forthooming! Soon after we landed, the skies opened up and dumped a year's supply of rain on the runway within a few minutes!

The storm had unleashed its fury on our destination, El Paso International — a few miles farther on - just as we reported in on the radio, closing the big field to even the big jets. Radar and instrument approaches were out of the question at the height of the storm, and the runways were flooded by the deluge.

Big Brother certainly looked after our interests that day!

The storm soon passed and we filed for Fort Stockton, Texas, but didn't get far. Flight Service had reports which advised against tackling the Sierra Diablo and Quitman Mountains, so contented ourselves with local sightseeing, looking over the huge bullrings in Juarez on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, returning to spend the night in Texas with the plane parked in nearby

New Mexico, and all of the scenery just across Soon we were to adjust to the completely air conditioned environment here, in Houston our rented car awaited us - air conditioned, of course. We were grateful for this feature as the thermometer remained near the hundred mark for our entire stay. We drove down to Galveston one day, getting lost going and coming on the maze of roads after having navigated the plane 2,200 miles without losing our bearings on the way.

Everything was Texas-size in Houston including the welcome from bus drivers, waitresses, motel employees and the man on the street. We got the feeling that the hospitality was far more than a tourist promotion. All too soon it was time to leave for New Orleans.

We made up for lost time the next day, flying right across the Lone Star State, to Houston, skimming the highway through rain and cloud through the rugged country to Fort Stockton, so low that the cars on the freeway blinked their lights in greeting. Once through the mountains the skies cleared and the temperature shot up near the hundred mark.

On the Edwards Plateau, ranches with famous names passed below, many with their own private landing fields. Oil wells pumped everywhere, but it was not very interesting country, so we climbed higher to escape the furnace-like heat.

We made it there in one hop, easy flying over a beautiful green countryside until we came to the great waterway system formed by the many Mississippi outlets, flowing to the Gulf of Mexico. From Lafayette we crossed 70 miles of drowned countryside where water and sky blended into a hazy blur, blotting out the horizon and putting u on instruments" over a bewildering mosaic of lakes, bayous and swamps.

There it was below us - the mighty Mississippi - and what a sight, with its busy commerce, heading downstream to New Orleans upstream through 17,000 miles of inland waterways to the heart of the continent.

Baton Rouge was crowding the great river to the north, with its Rhur-like industry strung out all the way to our destination, New Orleans, the great drama of the river unfolding below us like some wide screen extravaganza.

Only the purr of our Piper's engine broke the llence as wonder succeeded wonder. We crossed Lake Maurepas and 40-mile wide Lake Pontchs train, crossed as it was by highway, railroad and

Birds of Passage

The migration of birds, that age-old phenomena which is ever new, a repetitive cycle that is always alluring is something eagerly anticipated as the seasons approach.

The incoming flight of the geese, the swans, turkey vultures; the arrival of the humming birds and swallows, to mention but a few, their grace and beauty blending in harmony with the new spring growth, the bright coloring of the daffodils and tulips, complimenting the flowering trees and shrubs adorning our city and surrounding areas, are a welcome and pleasing sight.

In a different vein, the autumn migration produces a feeling of rather quiet contentment and fulfillment with the sight of the new families joining their elders, bound on what for them is their first great adventure, receiving instruction and training as they go along their way, gaining experience which they in turn will pass on to future generations, well kept secrets far beyond

Unfortunately it becomes increasingly difficult to enjoy many of our transients, as man in his eagerness for development denudes wooded areas, drains the marshes, and in a few weeks turns pleasant and productive meadows into housing subdivisions, driving wild life from its regular haunts, changing their habits and altering their fines of flight, often forcing birds to fly greater distances between havens of rest.

There are many Victorians who can still remember a sight familiar until the early 1940s, the large open fields bounded by Foul Bay Road on the west. Lansdowne Road on the north, and on the east, Cadboro Bay Road, the whole sweeping down to the Willows fair ground, a peaceful, almost rural scene. The slope immediately below Lansdowne Road was then usually seeded to grain. By September, the harvest being completed, the fields lay in stubble. Here one could see the turkey vultures gathering undisturbed in preparation for their migration.

It was my good fortune over a number of years to witness this annual event. Granted, I made it a point of being in the vicinity during the period Sept. 15 to 17. What induced the vultures to arrive regularly on Sept. 16 is also another well-feathered secret but the fact remains, that each year on the exact date the vultures would arrive in small groups, silently, stealthily, almost

They settled a hundred yards or so down the field from the northwest corner. The flock became noticeably larger as the day wore on, the birds bunching close together, showing no sign of

By next morning, Sept. 17, the assembly appeared to be complete, with evidence insiderable agitation and activity as the birds apparently formed up in an orderly fashion in

Although these birds are normally very quiet, there appeared at that time to be a ripple of soft muttering among them, until finally all instruc-tions having presumably been issued and understood, all were ready and alert for the

Suddenly, as if at a given signal, all activity ceased and for a few moments all was perfectly still, not a sound or move coming from the marshalling grounds, then probably at another signal, with a loud clatter of wings as if in farewell, the whole flook became airborne, heading over the city into the southwest. The pageant was over until the next Sept. 16.

From the quiet, unobstrusive behavior of the turkey vultures, let us turn to the more vociferous geese.

Browsing through the pages of the diary we find this entry. "1965—Nov. 10—temperature 51-46.—Sun, one hour 36 minutes—Geese flying over."

By ED M. RENOUF

This was quite a large and memorable flight, travelling high in a direction NNW to SE, intently bound towards a distant objective.

Why these birds should announce their roach with loud honking is something perhaps best left to conjecture, but geese though noisy at times, are not quarrelsome by nature, so the honking could hardly be accepted as disagree-ment. It may be just idle chatter. Personally, I would like to think of it as a form of encouragement, something in the nature of a sea shanty, or a marching song.

Whichever it may have been, this flight definitely drew much admiration for its dignity and discipline, flying in perfect formation, all of which are so characteristic of the Canada geese, always an inspiring sight.

Another entry reads: "1966—Qot. 22-Temperature, 52-43—Sun, 8 hours. Drove through Penin-Canada geese along Martindale Road.

This, as the entry indicates, provid to be a mild, pleasant day with excellent visibility.

But what, you might ask, has fall boloring in mmon with the passing of birds? Wall, quite a lot, for it too is a fleeting phenomena, one which is gradually becoming less and more widely Fortunately there is still enough of it to enjoy, and be justly proud of, especially when the day is climaxed, as this one was, by sighting a gaggle of about 30 geese grazing contentedly in an open field. This, admittedly, is not a common sight around Victoria today. More remarkable still was the fact of being able to stol the ear, walk quietly across the road, take a picture from a distance of about 50 yards and retuin without the birds appearing the least bit concerned.

These were the stars of the peaformance, ably and admirably supported by a cast of a thousand or more ducks continually using and landing in the distance.

The scene, a panorama of green fields flanked by trees of various heights and coloring with more scattered trees and blue ske forming the background. No more delightful and impressions and the scattered trees and blue ske forming the background. sive sight could have been staged to adorn this, the end of a perfect day.

And now, one more entry, in a different and Lake Borgne reflecting the brilliant blue sky.

Thoroughly awed by the greatest spectacle of our lives, we landed at New Orleans only to find that the 300-year-old city which has lived under five flags, had quite a few attractions on the

The French Quarter was our headquarters for the next two days, our motel being located right on the edge of the famous Vieux Carre. It boasted a typical New Orleans enclosed courtyard with garden, swimming pool, bar and restaurant and the inevitable iron railings and fountain.

Maude always shuddered at the thought of frogs legs on the table, but we tried them here and found them quite like chicken in appearance

Bourbon Street was all it claimed to be, with strippers gyrating in the doorways of most of the clubs, the tourists taking in the sights from the sidewalk, the barkers doing their best to entice them inside.

Friends told us that Bourbon Street had been cleaned up in recent years. It must have sizzled before the reformation!

Hyp Guinle's Famous Door was certainly "The Jazz Corner of America" with top Dixieland music by two great bands playing non-stop into the small hours of the mornings, and Mrs. Guinle flattered us by sitting with us at our table, and treating m on the house." way to appear here. A conducted tour of the city was most rewarding, and quite unlike any other. Maude insisted on staying an extra day in these charming surroundings and we left with great regret, having taken only the highlights.

From New Orleans we flew above the deep delta country-a maze of waterways unique and fabulous and, under sunny skies passed Mobile and swarms of navy training planes around Pensacola. Beyond it was thunder and lightning, and soon afterwards, rain, forcing us down at Quincy, 20 miles short of Tallahasse, where had planned to stay a few days in the Florida

At Quincy we waited till the worst was over flew "the iron compass"—a convenient railway line-on into Tallahassee, dodging the many radio and TV towers which grow like trees

Florida impressed us greatly, its flowers spiashing the whole countryside with color, flame vines, poinsetta, hibiscus and bougainvillea growing like weeds. We were amused by the huge piles of watermellon—three for a dollar—piled by the roads, and mystified by the blue lights on the top of police cars.

Two days later we worked our way into Palm Beach International Airport, our jumping off point for the Bahamas. The busy tower cleared us right onto the runway and we felt a little foolish as we streaked toward it at our top speed of 145 miles an hour, while the jets were the circuit, waiting their turn to land. As always, we got the utmost courtesy from the controllers no directed us inrough the maze of r this huge airport, showing us the consideration that they show the airliners the same

"They probably want to get us out of the way

Maude quipped.

We rented inflatable life jackets for the overwater flight here, and armed ourselves with the required papers and information for entering the Bahamas. Listing both Maude and I as "crew" reduced the red tape to practically nil and exempted us from the Bahamas departure tax also. We spent the night in West Paym Beach, getting drenched in a sudden downpour while sightseeing, and were up early to check the weather over the Atlantic. It was satisfactory so we headed for the sirport and our biggest Flying to the Bahamas involved penetration of the United States defence zone off the Atlantic coast, and it requires a special flight plan giving accurate information about course, altitude and time of penetration of the defence details of which may not be altered without clearance as continuous radar surveillance is maintained by the defence department. Airborne flight plans are subject to fighter interception for identification purposes, so we filed with Miami before starting out, obtained clearance and were flying over the famous resort strip, and heading eastward over the blue Atlantic.

Huge piles of billowy cloud are normal in these waters and today was no exception. We climbed steadily toward a broad expanse of fluffy "cotton candy" stretching as far as the eye could see. We had filed for 7,500 feet, so we headed toward a "sucker-hole" between two towering columns of cloud dead ahead only to have them close tight as we approached—and right on that continuing on our declared course at this altitude and no opening in that vast sea of cloud?

We called Miami radio for instructions, but got no answer-we were beyond range at that "You better do something." Maude advised. looking about half-expecting some jet visitors. "We'll have the air force after us before long."

Next week: Island hopping in the Bahaman.

The Dutty Colonist-PAGE I Sunday, November 19, 1967

Around the clock and around the world, coffee means pleasure. It is the heart of many lovely moments. It makes getting up in the morning tolerable; it is a break to ease the tensions right through the day, and that loitering after-dinner cup of coffee accentuates the peace and satisfactions of home.

It is obvious that our taste buds have become delightfully sophisticated. The more people travel . . . and how they DO travel . . . the oftener they enjoy new culinary pleasures. Our tables are evincing a new era of international cookery.

Everything from the main dish to coffee frequently takes on a new exotic look. No one appreciates the adventure of foreign food delicacies more fervently than Victor Bergeron, the Trader Vic of the restaurant world. His Asian and Polynesian specialities have become as famous as himself. Today we have borrowed three of his recipes . . . for Crab Crepes Bengal, Green Goddess Salad Dressing and Banana Soutile. Together with coffee served in glasses Tahitian ayle, they add up to a delectable fall luncheon.

Incidentally, it was the early French settlers who introduced the custom of drinking hot coffee from Tahiti. Now it is the style not only there but in Indonesia and other South Pacific lands.

Whether in a glass or cup however, the coffee should be equally delicious, full flavored and freshly brewed.

CRAB CREPES BENGAL . . . Crepes . 1 eggs, % cup sifted all purpose flour, % tsp. salt and 2 cups milk.

CRAB FILLING . . . 2 cans (7% oz each) King Crabmeat, 2 tsp. butter or margarine, 1 tsp. grated onion, 1 tsp. curry powder, ½ tsp. MSG. (Ac'cent), ½ tsp. Worcestershire sauce, 1 cup dry white wine, 2 cups well-seasoned white sauce

One of the most useful cook books I own is called Good Egg . . . half of the pages in the book are printed on white paper with the recipes using egg whites only. The other half of the book contains yellow pages with recipes using egg yokes. Having 4 egg yolks left Banana Souffle I turned to The Good Egg for recipes using 4 egg

GOLD CAKE . . . 4 egg yolks well beaten. 1/2 cup butter or margarine, 1 cup sugar, 1 tsp. vanilla, 1/4 cup milk, cups sifted cake flour and 3 tsp. baking powder.

Cream butter or margarine well, gradually add sugar. Beat. Add wellbeaten egg yolks and vanilla. Beat Add milk alternately with flour and baking powder sifted together. Mix well. Bake in an 8-inch greased and Boured tube pan for about 45 minutes.

Perhaps you don't want to make a cake, how about a boiled malad dressing to use your 3"egg yolks?"

BOILED SALAD DRESSING . 3 Thep, sugar, 1/2 sp. dry mustard, 1 Thsp. flour, 1 tsp. salt, 1 Thsp. butter, a good dash of Tabasco, 1/2 cup vinegar, 'a cup water, 4 egg yolks well beaten and cream or lemon juice to thin. This is a good salad dressing for those who don't like an oil dressing.

Here is the method ... mix dry ingredients.

Add butter, vinegar, water and Tabasco. Boil over hot water until smooth, stirring constantly. Put a few spoonfuls of the hot mixture into the beaten yolks. Mixing thoroughly then stir into the rest of the dressing. Let cook, but not boil, until ft thickens, stirring constantly. Store in refrigerator in a jar with a lid. When ready to serve, thin with a little cream or lemon juice.

DR. AUSTIN samples Portage lalet water.

Let's Get Back To a Natural Gorge And Portage Inlet

... says Dr. Alan Austin, aquatic biologist at UVic

There seems little doubt, from what I can gather both from written records, and the word of many senior local citizens, that Portage Inlet and the Gorge can be said to have been changed considerably by the activities of the communities living around and about in the drainage area of this waterway.

Assuming that the change has been for the worse, and who can doubt it, an improvement in the existing state seems to be called for. We have to be careful for this word "improvement" all too often means still more change, more alteration, engineering works and artificial changes frequently resulting in an unnatural built-up condition, not perhaps what most people would like.

Such results often arise through no particular fault on anyone's part except perhaps on everyone's part in that we mistakenly assume that technology can always improve upon a natural system.

After listening to the vivid picture in words of Portage Inlet and the Gorge as it was 50 to 60 years ago, painted by Aubrey Kent at the meeting in the McPherson Playhouse, Oct. 25, one can hardly doubt that the original condition of the area was an excellent one from the point of view of all users.

Mr. Kent was lucky enough to have been in Victoris since those days of more space and grace, but less pace, and it is largely with his words in mind that I have written this short account of the Inlet as it is today and how it has reached the present state, None of this is technical material, though a good deal of such data exists both with Dr. M. Waldichuck of Nanaimo and as a result of a preliminary biological survey carried out by Mrs. Yasuto Iwao (a visiting worker from Japan) and Pertage Inlet is virtually a very large (230 acres) flat bettomed pool or lagoon which is rather confined or separated from direct tidal influence by the Gorge narrows, but which is nevertheless more marine than freshwater. The hottom of the Inlet is fine black mud which is deep in places up to 15 and 17 feet, which probably overlays chars, and there is a good deal of ell grass or Zostera marina.

The waters of the inlet wary in their physical, chemical and biological nature from place to place and the whole picture is different in summer and winter.

In the winter we see the maximum effects of surrounding drainage areas in which the streams which drain into the Inlet originate. The

Sunday, Nevember 19, 1967

drainage area is quite extensive — 30 square miles — and includes the watersheds of Elk and Thetis Lakes. The main streams are Colquitz River and Craigflower Creek and during December. January and February these bring into the Inlet a volume of freshwater, as well as organisms which flourish in the lakes, and a rather freshwater biology is revealent. During June, July and August there is far less inflow from these streams and the inlet is almost totally marine — in fact can be slightly sakier than the sea. At other times there is usually a layer of freshwater overlying a layer of heavier saltier - but this is typical of estuaries.

The Living things in the Inlet fall into two main groups — the large visible creatures such as the few surviving fish, coho, cutthroat, herring and oysters even though all these have been reduced, almost to extinction in the Inlet, and the smaller usually invisible, minute plankton both plant and animal and the small bottom dwellers

It is the smaller, more lowly plant life which is the basic or fundamental life upon which all the rest depends. I call this set-up the Wildlife Iceberg — with its visible tenth, in the animals and plants we know and see and call wildlife, and its invisible nine-tenths of submerged microscopia forms which feed and support the visible tenth.

This system (like an iceberg) is finely balanced and if any part of it increases or decreases too rapidly then the whole complex may become unbalanced and topple and is in-big trouble. This brings us back to the Inlet!

This estuarine inlet has developed according to a natural pattern from its formation, probably sometime after the end of the last ice age, about 6000 to 7000 years ago, up until very recently.

Just like any other water basin it received runoff from the land surrounding it and has had a good deal of silts, clays and muds added to it, tending to reduce its volume and eventually size.

These are natural normal processes and happen to all water bodies including for instance Buttle Lake, most estuaries and even to the sea! However, it has happened to them all at a very, very slow rate indeed — at least until man's recent increases in population.

At first, Man — Indian Man — was able to make use of the Inlet for fishing, recreation as well as transport, but in the absence of an owner.

well as transport, but in the absence of an over active technology was not able to alter or harm the area in the process of this use.

The normal pattern of events proceeded as if he were not there. How long this went on is hard to say but I would guess for at least 10 times as long as we, the paleface, have been here.

When we arrived the "things" getting into the inflow streams increased rapidly because of increased washoff due to deforestation, farming. clearing and building.

and more built us domestic wastes were added to the inflow streams together with assorted garbage that always seems to find itself onto public property and also oil slicks from boat motors, until finally we reach the existing state.

However, almost all the materials mentioned are of basically natural origin and can be held to be part of the same process by which land-originated materials get washed into waterways:

ials mentioned can be held to which landnto waterways. trophication or simply enrichment; it is an inevitable change in all water bodies, BUT in nature it proceeds at apvery, very slow rate indeed. However, once the activities of technological man come into the system it can be very, very rapid and processes normally taking thousands of years may be condensed into as many decades.

In the case of a confined lagoon, such as Portage Inlet, in an area fairly heavily settled and with inflow streams used as vehicles for carriage of considerable quantities of sewage, the rate of change — pollution if you wish — may be very high.

What happens to these materials which are carried into the Inlet? Most of them dissolve partly and add nutrients or soluble foods to the water to some extent, the sewage adding very large quantities. These nutrients are absorbed by the basic plant life — both microscopic planktonic and also the eli grass - these plants form food for animal life of all sorts.

All of these organisms have limited life spans and eventually die, sink and decay adding to the bottom muds.

Since the Inlet like any other estuary is the meeting place for fresh and salt water, there is a tendency for any particulate matter — fine bits and pieces suspended in the waters — to settle or drop out to the bottom. This will happen both to particles in the streams and in the tidal water. the particulate matter from both sources tending to be retained in the Inlet which thus acts as very large settling tank.

All these features tend to add to the muds, make them richer and make the waters of the inlet more like soup. The added nutrients from this soup feed the basic plant life which therefore grow more prolifically, adding even more nutrients by this growth itself, this plant life and animals feeding on it die and settle to the muds

It is a case then of nutrients—a form of capital being trapped in plants, being added to by plant growth itself — a form of interest on the capital - and then being banked away in the muds.

More capital (nutrients) enter in the sewage, more plant growth adds interest and more is banked away in the muds — clearly an accellerating process. This process is a sick form of natural productivity. It is difficult to say just how rapidly this process is changing the Inlet but it is certain to compound with each year.

Local opinion differs regarding the changes which have occurred during the past two or three decades and varies from none to very considerable! I can only say there are records in 1930s of lots of oysters, herring and salmon, and photographs taken then show lots of people swimming.

Since the course of events occurring to many other estuarine situations as they age have been carefully followed by scientists it is possible to at least attempt to predict the type of fate that is typical for such a shallow productive water body as Portage Inlet.

First, decreasing depth will occur with buildof muds and increase of rooted plants which accelerate this build-up process, then an increase in mud flats leading to salt marsh and finally, when the tide can no longer cover the area, to freshwater marsh with a few channels through it to give the streams access to the sea! With lots of people living round about and lots of garbage this would be a sorry, smelly mess!

I have not mentioned the bacterial contamination or health hazard side of the story. This comes relatively late in the piece when quantities of inadequately treated sewage or faulty septic tanks put more living and dead organic material into the water than the natural system can clean up, i.e., becomes "polluted" by my definition. At this point coliform counts remain high and the possibility of disease organisms in the water increases.

It should be added here that it is this organic material that can deplete the oxygen of the waters and cause die-off of some organisms. It also nourishes algal and any other plant growth which in turn depletes the oxygen when it decays although in fact actual growth of algae and other plants increases the oxygen in the water.

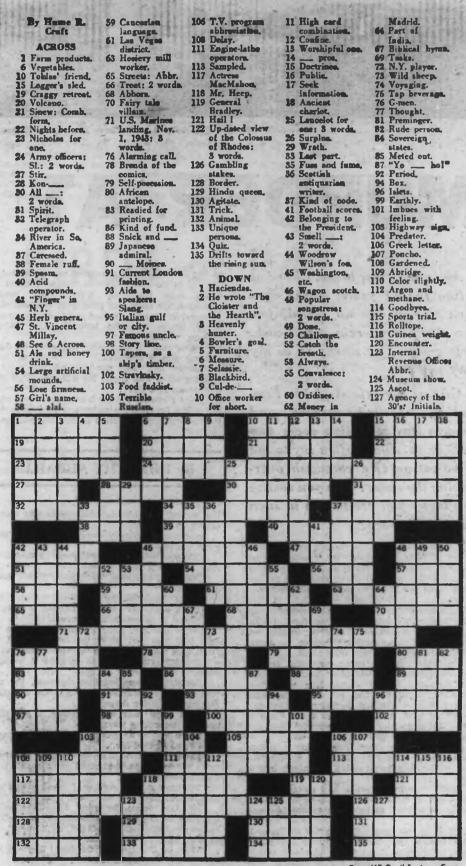

This is the process, it is what has and is happening with some hows and whys but now let us reverse the process and go back say just over 100 years.

We would arrive back in Indian days when the Inlet most certainly supported as large a population of animals and plants as it was naturally capable of supporting without any interference from man. We cannot be sure as to the precise numbers of creatures since the pioneers did not include biologists - mores the

Perhaps. I am alone in thinking that despite our wonderful technology and capacity to destroy natural ecosystems we have not yet demonstrated our ability to create or even improve upon a natural system of creatures living together in

There are apparent exceptions in landscaped parks, in agricultural husbandry, etc., but even these, when opened to close scrutiny are better in

Following on from this, it would seem that a return of an old sick system to its natural youthful balance would be sensible.

To return Portage Inlet as nearly as possible to a relatively young healthy state would first and foremost require the cutting off of all sources of nutrient other than that which normal runoff over clean natural land would involve.

The sewage plants and industries and various er establishments emptying wastes Colquitz and Craigflower would have to go for good, but every main tributary stream and ditch would also have to have its clean up, and drains would have to divert surface runoff from unnatural or unclean areas.

SANDSPIT ON CLAYOQUOT ISLAND where Dorothy Abraham found murdered man

MURDER AT TOFINO

As a young war bride, I lived at Tofino for 11 years, in the days when there was no road, few people, lots of rain, and peace, perfect peace, or nearly so as my story will tell.

One of my friends from England who travelled extensively and came to stay at Tofino every two years or so, would often say to me as we sat on the verandah overlooking the water: "Do you realize how lucky you are to live in such a beautiful place?"

It WAS lovely, no cars rushing by, for there was no road to rush upon; not a sound to be heard, but the plaintive cry of a loon, the gulls, or the wild ducks, which if disturbed would get up with a noise like thunder (the duck shooting was marvelous); the occasional chug-chug of the fishing launches, and always the eternal murmur of the sea on the outside beaches; this, after a big storm, increased to a roar, it seemed as though it must come tumbling through the bush, and often terrified me on a dark night.

Sometimes cougar came prowling around after our goats, or the odd black bear, the latter quite harmless if left alone. Life was very uneventful, civilization had not caught up with this part of the world, and the Princess Maquinna brought us food, mail, and news three times a month. Oh! to go back to those peaceful days, but alas, one can never go back, only go on!

Just across the water from Tofino is Stubbs Island, usually known as Clayoquot, a delightful place with a sand-spit running out about half a While he was busy either here or at Tofino I would row up the inlet, or explore the many beaches and caves. It is a delightful island, and inearlier days the sandspit was decorated with scalped heads, sitting on poles.

At one time a dreadful slaughter took place man.

He was supposedly too severely wounded to get away, but next day when the indians came aboard to plunder, he set off the powder magazine, and blew them all to pieces, their limbs falling into the canoes of the kloochmen (women) who waited below.

One morning just as my husband was leaving for Tofino, he discovered that a launch belonging to one of the fishery guardians was grounded at the end of the Spit. This was nothing unusual, as boats were frequently drifting and getting grounded. We knew this man well, and had often been out in his boat. He had one failing, known to many, which has also brought havoc to the Indians - drink

"Poor man," I said to my husband. "Go down and ask him to breakfast."

"Better not," said my husband. "He may be sleeping off a wild night. He will get off at high tide, about 11 o-clock.

I was disgusted. By this time the wind was blowing a southeast gale, and raining in torrents, so decided to go and see for myself.

Down the long jetty I walked to where my own boat was tied up at the wharf, where the float was madly bobbing up and down as the waves came rushing in, as they do in a south-

Somehow I tumbled into my boat, the rest was easy, as the wind carried me along, whilst the rain came pouring down.

As I drew near to the launch, I felt there must be something wrong.

There was no answer, to my call, an uncanny silence, no sign of life.

Rowing round to the other side I found the cabin window open, and could see a man's body lying face downward. Touching it with my oar, I found it was stiff as a board, and must have been dead some time.

By this time the men from the store, probably feeling a bit ashamed of themselves, had walked down the sand spit, so I rowed over to them saying: "Lie dead."

Then as I set out of the beat they piled in

Then, as I got out of the boat, they piled in and rowed over to the launch

By this time I was feeling quite groggy, almost seasick, wet through, and horrifled at finding a dead man, never having seen a dead person before.

Whether the men knew more than they let on, I shall never know, but, and here the powers-thatbe raise their eyebrows, instead of sending for the police, for no one should move a dead body before they arrive, they put the man in my boat, and later towed the launch through the water.

Of course any evidence there might have been was washed away. I have often thought how stupid I was not to have gone aboard the launch and seen for himself the state of things, and to demand that the body be left, until the police came. But somehow, I didn't think about it, besides it had given me quite a shock,

Soon police inspectors and detectives arrived from Port Alberni and Victoria. I was questioned and requestioned, and the preliminary inquiry took place before my husband at Tofino.

I "Yes your worship, no your worshiped" him he gazed at me with a judicial eye, then the trial was adjourned.

I felt terribly important, Front page news cried: "MURDER AT TOFINO - Dorothy Abraham finds a murdered man!"

After the evidence was gathered, all who had last seen or heard of the dead man, or knew were subpoensed for the Assizes to be held at Nanaimo. Two Indians were arrested in connection with the crime, though they were acquitted at the trial, as there was not sufficient evidence to convict them.

When the time came. 24 witnesses left Tofino on the S.S. Princess Maquinna for the trial It was quite a holiday for everyone at the government's expense, albeit a gruesome one.

I stayed at the Malaspina Hotel which had recently been opened, and of which Nanaimo was very proud.

The morning we left Tofino, just before the Princess Maguinna arrived, one of the witnesses committed suicide, which rather complicated

Of course everyone reading this now says: "He committed the murder," but I am quite sure he did not.

He was such a harmless little man, and could ot have killed a fly. I knew him well, but he might quite easily have known something about it and was perhaps afraid.

If I had a real flair for murder stories. I could make up quite a yarn, as to what I think might have happened, but it doesn't do to say, and I don't aspire higher than journals, as anyone will known who has read my book, Lone Come.

After getting all keyed up on the morning of the trial, it was posponed for a few days, so some of us set off to Victoria for the weekend. I travelled with a detective and other officers of the realm.

Imagine my surprise when I enquired why they were so concerned about a certain box in a corner of the car, and was told it was the maid

Horrors! I nearly jumped out of the car! Being in the witness box, and the very first witness was a horrible experience. To have questions fired at me in the most alarming manner was disconcerting. But then it isn't every day that one is a star witness at a murder trial! Though a gay holiday in a way, it was also a distressing affair, a horrible end to any man, and a strange interlude in my peaceful life at Tofino.

Back to a Natural Gorge and Inlet

Even then there would be the bank of nutrients in the bottom muds, a possible course of secondary pollution.

Perhaps our local technology could stretch to removing some of these in an effective manner, using them for fertilizer or soil additive, the latter being the real origin of the nutrients.

With all nutrient sources and some of the mud removed it would seem to me that there would be reason to believe that it would take very many generations for the existing state of the Inlet to be reached once again.

How much of the mud would have to be removed it is difficult to say without further study and, when it has been removed, it may be necessary to sweep the algae off the surface for a year or so until the system settles down to its natural and original slow steady pace.

I should say that removing the algae and using them as soil additives is far more sensible than poisoning them as is sometimes done with our lakes.

This leads only to their death and not to their removal and they will decay and add to the muds anyway. Furthermore, it seems likely that poisoning waterways may well predispose further rank growths by upsetting balances.

The two-pronged action of stopping all politicion and removal of mud compared with other alternatives may have some support in that it is likely to be cheaper than for instance the canal from Esquimalt Harbor. The latter would bring in very cold water and remove perhaps the prime potential amenity of the Inlet — warm water for swimming.

With increasing populations in the area and with the technological activities in Esquimalt Harbor the canel could well bring in even more pollution and in any case may not flush the Inlet enough to stop nutrient trapping by plants, nor would it do anything about the nuisance muds already there.

Much more important it would be an entirely new unnatural, artificial experiment, the result of which we can have no clear idea. It would not be in effect simply a reversal of a natural process.

But is any action worth the trouble and money concerned? This is the question.

One cannot help wonder that if we could see tomorrow a Portage Inlet with the clean hygenic safe waters and varied wildlife of about 100 years ago, with much better public access, some publically owned land as park and recreational areas, good boating (canoes, skiffs, rowboats, satiboats — no powerboats) and good awimming facilities — a powerful potential of the Inlet in an area of very cold sea swimming — if we could see all this we would probably say that it was certainly worth the thought, effort and the dollars involved.

The real value of such a natural feature with its natural populations will not be realized perhaps for another generation or so, in the time of our children or grandchildren. There is little doubt that a natural waterway surrounded by some park — along the Colquitz and Craigflower courses to the head lakes of ER and Thetis would be admirable — together with some swimming and boating facilities (which without motorboats would retain some of the quietude of the natural surroundings — World Health Organization recognized noise as a pollutant in 1964) — the advantages of a clean natural environment in the heart of a spreading urban area — will be beyond

Certainly making such a facility from scratch would be very costly indeed, and to my mind humanly impossible despite the achievements of space technology. It seems that the cities of the world that have had natural waters in their midsts, have been rated among the most beautiful—Venice, Florence, Paris, Copenhagen and Stockholm for instance.

A natural beauty spot, a park with real, not artificial, appeal and beauty, will always be valued however values change, and I will bet anyone that their value increases as time goes on. If I am wrong, then I am glad that I will probably not be around when all our wild places and waderness and parks have gone and the material man-made amusements have taken their place, and I pity our children.

BIRDS of PASSAGE

"1967 — Oct. 2 — Temperatures, 58—48, Sun, 3 hours, 6 minutes, Rain, .67. Geese flying over." Not all October days are perfect, neither are all sights witnessed pleasant ones.

This Oct. 2 was something very much like the curate's egg, good in parts, and so it transpired that while enjoying those few hours of sunshine the sound of jet engines floated faintly down on the light north wind. These particular birds of passage always arouse a keen interest and are passage always arouse a keen interest and are very much missed when failing to appear at their regular hours and on regular course.

Flying very high, this one however, was neither at the usual time or on regular route, bearing down almost due north to south and farther to the west. Perhaps not too much notice would have been taken of this except that flying ahead of the jet, at a considerably lower altitude, was a flight of about a dozen geese, probably detached from some larger body, and both on identical course.

The birds flew swiftly, the jet following provided an opportunity to appreciate their high rate of speed, their formation at first sighting was good and their behavior quite composed.

Soon the distance between them narrowed, when either disturbed by sounds or vibrations, or both. The geese became noticeably nervous, wavering and continually changing leader. Now directly overhead the large swept-winged aircraft looked formidable, glistening like burnished steel in the morning sun, its two long vapor trails stretching out behind like thick ropes of white wool unwinding spirally from beneath its body.

In a few moments the two flights had become separated, the jet quickly forging ahead into the birds' line of vision. This sudden sighting of the monster which had so long tormented and pursued them, immediately threw the whole flight into utter confusion, falling aside, twisting and gyrating in all directions, from the ground looking like so many sheets of newspaper being tossed around in a whirlwind, until the disorganized group rapidly disappeared into the northeast, toward the nearest body of water.

This, like many other bird incidents concerning aircraft, was no doubt pure coincidence yet one of a kind which produced a rapidly changing scene, from fascination to one of awe and consternation at the sight of such noble creatures scattering in blind terror, a strong contrast to their usually placid and well-ordered behavior. The pleasant sights in nature are always a joy to remember, but the more distasteful ones remain difficult to forget.

The San Francisco News Letter joined the battle with what The Colomist thought an insulting little note, and so, in the local it was titled "Precisely!" — "Mr. Seward remains in the cabinet to negotiate the exchange of British Columbia into the United States — so says the telegraph and the point is very fine made indeed.

"Nevertheless the law of nomenclature beats Mr. Seward. British "Columbia' was predestined to Jonathan; and that's why they called it "Columbia."

"Hail Columbia," was written on purpose and to that ecstatic tune the British 'sister' will fall into line without any cabinet, and without any Mr. Seward."

"Our American cousins never experienced so acute a pang as that inflicted on them by the creation of the Dominion of Canada, and the statesmanlike system of Canadian government, in consolidating and assimilating the institutions of the various sections into one perfect autonomy—all this has excited the fury of the Americans.

"The sound, healthy policy of Canada, conducted by honest, principled and loyal men, is a marked contrast, at variance with the present institutions in the U.S.
"But, when added to this the

"But, when added to this, the Canadians, though small and yet poor, have shown themselves capable of simulation in the desire to bind the various sections of the dominion together by an overland route, the rage of our American triends knows no bounds.

"We could well excuse such ebullition of feeling, and the desire felt on the part of our American neighbors to absorb us in the ample folds of their union, did we not feel convinced that the change would be far from advantageous to us.

"That the United States will ever form a strong government is extremely doubtful.

"Yet, with the most barefaced effrontery we British Columbians are invited to annex ourselves to this model Republic, and for what?

"So that our vitals may be dragged from us by unprincipled political adventurers? So that we may be taxed four times the extent of our present taxation, and American domestic morality may be brought into our home circles to the exclusion of all that makes society worthy of the name?

"It is sad, very sad, to contemplate, but it is too late; the Americans hate us because we object to being dragged into the slough they call the Great Republic.

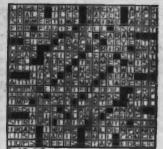

"We disclaim any wish to say anything hurtful to the feelings of Americans — but we would strongly recommend to our American friends that they leave us alone; we want nothing from them, and if we do buy their produce we pay them well for it.

"We are immaculate, and can afford to throw stones, but our neighbour live in very slim glass house, and cannot indulge in that luxury."

Was this last paragraph written tongue-in-cheek? I cannot tell.

Anyway, looking back a century, I would say The Cariboo Sentinel had the last word.

Impressive Novel About Russia Took 20 Years to Complete

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Using the conjunction of content and style as the yardstick of excellence, The Witnesses is by far the most impressive novel to come my way this season.

The author, making full use of a lavish canvas, has painted a detailed, representational picture of Russia from 1903 to 1917, opening with the twilight phase of the Romanov dynasty and ending with its downfall in the October revolution.

In The Witnesses this climatic phase in history is seen through the eyes of people who participated in k—the nobility, for whom it represented the final act, and the revolutionaries, for whom it was the first.

The author's approach exactly matches the period: the leisurely, even stately, opening is in dramatic contrast to the swift-moving, staccato style of the violent end.

Although the reader is caught up in history as it is being made, action is never allowed to overwhelm character and we are as interested in the whole cast of nobles, proletarians and schemers as we are in the death throes of Imperial Russia.

We are told that the author devoted 20 years to studying documents and interviewing surviving witnesses and in the writing of this book. This is not surprising for its structure, intricate as a fugue, and its colorful cast, constantly in motion against the panoramic background of Mother Russla, mirrors the scope of research.

This is particularly obvious in the lengthy sequence dealing with the waiting period in Switzerland of the young, impatient revolutionaries—Lenin, Trotsky, Plekhanov and the others

As all the literature about this period shows, no group of plotters was ever wordler than these men, and the author not only captures the atmosphere but also the spirit of the Bolshevik leaders, even to the conceit of employing their conspiratorial pseudonyms throughout the

Interest in this long, absorbing novel is chiefly centred on the created characters of Prince Nelidov and his young American wife, Susan; on the aristocratic Max, who joins the plotters of the revolution, and on Max's mistress. But the appearances of the Czar and his generals and ministers, as well as the most obscure of the plotters, instantly rivets our attention.

The sudden transition from timeless Holy Russia to the turmoil of revolutionary takeover is succinctly summed up by Vladek (Trotsky) who is made to say to Max: "This is the real Russia — not the reasonable, the kindly, the talkative, the western-minded, but the wild, mad and bad."

All who survived the subsequent massacres became witnesses. This very fine novel is about some of them—a fictional reconstruction which leaves history undisturbed.

Many readers, going by experience, a void novels about prerevolutionary Russia because all have large casts and each character is known by several names, making it almost impossible to keep track of the twists and turns of the story.

In The Witnesses, no program is needed to identify the players, for

A SORDID AFFAIR

Reviewed by JOHN BARKHAM

In 1956 Britain, France and Israel did what Israel was able to do singlehandedly last June, namely, whip the Egyptian armed forces and advance as far as the Suez Canal. It may well be that from this abortive tripartite adventure the Israelis learned the lesson that they needed no help in dealing with Egypt. But the brief Suez war also carried other lessons, the most urgent of which was that Britain could no longer impose imperial diktats by force.

It was a shabby business, this under-the-table collusion by three powers, two of which were old and experienced enough to know better. The Suez expedition, militarily successful though it was, was executed against Washington's express wishes. It prompted Washington to launch a drive in the United Nations, which, by an overwhelming vote, forced Britain, France and Israel to withdraw. As a by-product President Nasser of Egypt was also able to claim a gigantic "victory."

In due time the Suez flasco precipitated the resignation of the British Prime Minister, Sir Anthony Eden, who bears the primary responsibility for this unfortunate affair in the eyes of history. He can at least console himself with the ught that he gambled and lost. But another who lost, and wrecked a promising political career at its eak, was Anthony Nutting, Eden's Minister of State in the Foreign Office. A determined opponent of Eden's Suez adventure, he resigned before the attack on Egypt, but consistently refused to give his

Now, more than a decade later, he lifts the wraps from what he calls the "sordid" conspiracy. Although his Parliamentary career was destroyed, he explains that he could not speak as long as any of the major participants remained in active politics. Eden, it seems, was the sparkplug of the whole affair.

When Nasser seized the Suez Canal, Eden felt Britain's vital interests were threatened and made up his mind to re-establish Britain's military authority in the Middle East by force. In cahoots with the French, who were smarting from Nasser's seizure of the Canal, a plan was worked out to encourage the Israelis to seize the Sinai Peninsula, after which the British and French would intervene ostensibly to restore order, but in reality to regain control of the Canal.

It was gunboat diplomacy of the most devious kind, and Nutting would have none of it. He is unsparing in his account of the top-accret discussions in England and France, where notes were never taken so as to leave no records of the talks. But he was present at certain of the conversations and remembers them only too well. Later Eden was to deny many of the accusations of collusion levelled at him

It would not be proper for a former member of the British Cabinet to call his Prime Minister a liar in so many words, but Nutting comes perilously close to doing so. Once, in the course of his House of Commons apologia, Eden went so far as to insist that there had been no foreknowledge that Israel would attack Egypt. Says Nutting flatly: "This was, I think, the one occasion when an actual untruth was spoken."

Well, it's all dead and buried. Eden and Nutting have long since retired to private life, and with this final version the Suez affair may now be considered closed. Only one thing remains: the Israelis are back where they were in 1956 and don't look like leaving. Hence Nasser may have some trouble figuring out how to claim this one as a victory.

History in Lighter Vein

It is unlikely that Victoria fur biologist W. A. (Judge) McKay's book, The Great Canadian Skin Game, will be adopted for school use, but it is safe to say that a young reader will gain more knowledge of our early history, as seen through the whimsical eyes of Judge McKay, than from many a heavy school text.

He has dared to look lightly at the past. In fact, one of the charms of Skin Game is its irreverence.

His book has been described as the greatest tongue-in-cheek account of Canadian history ever.

He poses the premise that the discoveries and explorations of Canada's lands and waters were coincidental to the commercial activities of the early French and English fur traders — that these first settlers were, so to speak, sorced to venture north and west as the beaver became scarce in the

Islander Writers Invade Book Field

Reviewed by ALEC MERRIMAN Islander Editor

Writers of the Colonist's Islander Magazine are bursting into print in the book field in a big way, with several different writers having new books out for this year's Christmas gift shoppers.

Muriel Wilson's Cookbook and George Nicholson's Vancouver id's West Coast have been out for a couple of years now and have met with wide acclaim. Both are still available.

Gilean Douglas, whose nature rambles from Cortes Island, near Campbell River, bring pleasure each month to Islander readers, has written a book of 32 poems, titled Seascape With Figures.

Setting for her delightful poems is mainly around Channel Rock and the seashores which have become so familiar to many of us through her stories in this magazine.

Miss Douglas, world traveller, philosopher, speaker, professional photographer and already a Canadian poet of note, is the author of three other books of poetry and one of prose.

Her book would make a lovely gift for those who enjoy poetry.

His newest book, Husky of the Mounties, is a collection of animal stories, illustrated by Victor Am-brus, winner of the Kate Greenway Medal for distinguished work in childrens' books illustrations.

Some of the 10 stories that make up this fine book have appeared in The Islander. All are stimulatingly written to awaken new interest in the strange loyalties of animals, and judged by human standards, their unpredictable patterns of behavior.

The first five stories are about a husky dog, who was lead dog for the Mounted Police detachment on Hudson Bay in 1903. This dog, Mike, is no stranger to Islander readers.

Second five stories are about Queen, the Airdale, who managed to swim for safety when her master drowned in a boating tragedy in the Gulf of Georgia. Her fight for aurvival is compassionate reading.

This is a book that can't help stir the emotions of any growing boy.

Mailer's 'Message' Novel, Obscene, Disturbing

Whilst the rest of Victoria was embroiled in a heated controversy over the inclusion in a school textbook of a story containing an earthy fourletter word, I was hiding in a corner reading Norman Mailer's latest opus, Why Are We in Vietnam?

Mailer not only uses every vulgar and obscene four-letter word known to the English-speaking world, he actually invents variations that would make even Henry Miller blush. And to make certain they are read he sprinkles them generously throughout every paragraph on every

The Alaskan chapters contain sections of endless stream of consciousness writing in which D. J. tells about himself and his family. Throughout, the calculated callousness, cynicism and aggressiveness is utterly loathsome.

The revoltingly brutal bear hunt is, no doubt, an allegory—in reality Mailer's depiction of the hunt of the primitive American, a member of a hideous barbaric tribe, seeking out wealth (and therefore honor) by means of lustful murder.

The story-line is virtually imposnible to follow, but in places one is strangely held by the rhythmic sense of the prose. The crudity of

In addition to more filthy fourletter words than one has come to expect even from Mailer, the book is permeated with an anal fixation. It in turn insulting, depraved, irrelevant, nauseating, undisciplined, angry, and primitive.

It left me feeling numbed, unclean, limp-and disturbed.

As a "message" novel-if you can stomach k-it has, I suppose, some merit, although I confess the message I received was garbled in transmission.

You may well question why a cesspool book like Why Are We in Vietnam? merits a review in the Colonist, or even why such a book is published. The answer to both questions lies in the law of supply and demand. Mailer has now written nine novels, all of the type that no respectable person would ever dream of reading. And yet every one of them has sold like hot cakes.

Makes you think, doesn't it?

Broadway to Barkerville

Years ago, when trans-Pacific ships generally made Victoria their first port of call, occasionally you could spot a provincial policeman at the gangplank picking up some fugitive. These were usually embezzlers or swindlers of some sort who, after being processed under the Fugitive Offenders Act would be returned to Australia, New Zealand or sometimes Hong Kong. I was then part of this law enforcement scheme so used to notice some quaint characters being ashered into the B.C. Police headquarters on the Langley Street side of the courthouse.

Most were men of rather distinguished bearing, the type penologists dub "middle aged tractables," who ranged from a phoney baronet (who was part of a globe encircling ring of Australian race track swindlers) down to smiling Private George Smith of the King's Own Yorkshire Light Infanty. George, believe it or not, went round the world on the strength of his smiling face. This was a caper, he told me, that started one day in 1917 when he came out of the Flanders trenches for a rest period.

In some quick fingered manner he picked up a warrant which, with a few deft changes, entitled him to transportation to Marseilles. There he got on a troopship that landed him at Aden, where he attached himself to a British unit.

Through another orderly room juggle he later got himself moved to Bombay, then on to Calcutta, and finally to Hong Kong.

He showed me pictures of himself while he was on the regimental football team there.

In some fashion he fixed himself another eastward move but it was while he was sailing across the Picific, a storm developed in the

These fugitive offender cases are not to be confused with extradition cases, which usually involved U.S. futigives. They, however, didn't seem to have the same glamor of our overseas visitors.

Of course the matter of returning U.S. Sugitives is an old story in Victoria. As a matter of fact we were returning them across the border long before there was an extradition treaty. Perhaps the strangest of all these cases was the very first: a story that goes back to the era of hoopskirts, sideburns and gaslight. Back 105 years to mid-April 1862, when a bewhiskered New York detective called John Merritt called one morning at the Bastion Square police headquarters to present his credentials and tell Commissioner of Police Augustus Pemberton an extraordinary story.

Seems that eight months before, in Sept. 1861, 40-year-old Obediah Adams, partner in a New York bond house, suddenly disappeared with $70,000 of the firms money. Apparently he had been cooking the books and, sensing iraminent show down, took off.

This was about the time a reform movement placed the New York police (with its 17 detectives) on a metropolitan basis. Which also meant that the new superintendent, John A. Kennedy, was more than anxious to show how the modernized set up could perform. For this reason he gave John Merritt sole charge of the Adams

88. PACIFIC . . . five days to San Francisco.

His instructions were that Merritt should stay with the case no matter how long it took, or where the trail led.

Apparently it was months before Merritt got any sort of a lead, but it came one day in an obscure item in a New York paper. Something to the effect that a Mr. King, a free spending American was cutting quite a social swath in Toronto, which was in Canada West. By successive changes of canal boat, horse stage and train Mr. Merritt visited Toronto and although he soon tagged Mr. King as the absent Mr. Adams, troublesses Mr. King as the absent Mr. Adams, trouble was Mr. King was now absent.

He had gone, people said, to the Cariboo district of British Columbia where, according to latest reports, people were digging up gold by the shovelful. Thus it was a slightly frustrated Det. Merritt who returned to New York and reported to his chief.

B.C. POLICE STORY By CECIL CLARK

"You'll have to get him!" was Kennedy's instant dictum, which left Merritt with nothing to do the next day but study a map of Canada, wondering how he was going to get to the Pacific coast. From all reports it was almost useless to cross Canada for, if you managed to olamber through the passes of the Rockies, you would have to raft your way down some swift running rives.

An alternative, of course, would be to cross the States in one of the four-horse "celerity coaches," those canvas covered stages that ran from St. Louis down through Memphis to El Paso and then on to San Francisco.

It was a 2,700-mile route and with a change of horses every 25 miles, the coaches kept going night and day. You could stop over anywhere, with the assurance that three days later another coach would catch you up. The fare was $100, meals totalled $25, and you could make the Pacific coast in the remarkable time of 22 days.

There was just one slight catch: The war between the north and the south! Although St. Louis was in Union hands, Memphis wasn't. In addition you took somewhat of a chance crossing Texas where you might run into Col. John Baylor's flying column of Confederate cavalry.

Although they were letting local passengers and mail through, the New York detective realized that there was an excellent chance of his being picked up as a Yankee spy and, if they didn't shoot him out of hand, he might well spend the duration in Andersonville.

But Kennedy had said follow the trail, and follow it he would. So he chose the safer and longer route, by boat from New York down to Aspinwall, across the fever-ridden jungles to Panama by ramshackle, woodburning, narrow gauge railway.

This journey landed him in honky tonk

Panama, where he got a boat for San Francisco. Two weeks later he transferred at the Golden Gate to the sidewheeler Pacific, and five days later stepped ashore at Esquimalt.

History doesn't relate whether he paid two bucks for passage by sailboat to Victoria, or hiked the muddy bush rail, bag in hand.

When Pemberton heard the finish of the detective's story, he called in his second-incommand, Supt. Horace Smith. When he heard the story, Smith recalled a wealthy stranger recently in town from Canada.

He was a man exactly matching the descripton of the fugitive. Trouble was he had only stayed here for a few days before heading for booming Barkerville.

"I guess I'll just have to follow him," said Merritt quietly. Which was quite a decision for the 60-year-old New Yorker, more accustomed to Broadways's horse buses than back packing over the mile-high mule track that wound over Pavilion Mountain.

Undeterred, Merritt caught the steamer for Yale, but in a week or so he was back in Victoria. He hadn't run out of stamina, just out of money. He told Pemberton he'd got as far-as Lillooet. In addition he'd been having some second thoughts about the legality of his mission.

"I guess I'll go down to San Francisco," he told Pemberton, "and get a warrant from the U.S. Marshal—and some more money."

Then as an afterthought he added: "I think maybe it would be a good idea if I came in as a miner the next time. I could pick up an outfit here in Victoria, and get a couple of horses at Yale." After a pause he added, "Who known, I might even pick up some gold."

might even pick up some gold."

It was on June 27, 1862, that Merritt got back from San Francisco (armed with a warrant from the Governor of California) but before he could plan his next step Pemberton had news for him. Adams was back in Victoria!

Seems the 20-man Victoria police force had been briefed on the New Yorker's mission and some sharp-eyed constable had tipped of Sgt. George Blake that he had seen the fugitive land from a mainland steamer at the foot of Bastion Street.

The word had been passed round and Adams had been under surveillance ever since.

It was on the heels of this information, that Sgt. Blake imparted a last minute development. Adams had just booked passage on the Pacific, due to leave Esquimait at 10 that night!

It didn't take Merritt long to book passage for the same trip and that night, as he stood in the shadow of a wharf shed at Esquimalt, he finally saw Adams go aboard. Then picking up his bega he followed him up the gang plank. It was as a heaving line hit the dock at Sam

It was as a heaving line hit the dock at San Francisco that Merritt tapped Obediah on the arm and introduced himself. A few days later the indefatigable Merrit took his man down to Panama, across the Isthmus, and up to New York.

Exactly 12 months from the day he absconded, Obediah Adams faced a New York judge and jury, and soon after that he was on his way to the penitentiary. John Merritt, the man who had travelled 20,000 miles to put him there, presumably turned his attention to the hoop-skirted hustlers on Broadway!
